difficulties it was intended to remove. It is, lastly, not possible to provide for everything. The Legislature has wisely rejected the proposal to convert the Code into a Digest of the case-law—a law which is more extensive than the Acts around which it has grown. As, however, the new Code becomes the better understood, a reference to the earlier law which it supersedes will become less and less necessary.

It would, of course, have been possible, as it would have been a lighter task, to have noted selected decisions only. We, however, preferred to give as complete a record of the subject as possible, believing that we should do a greater service by endeavouring to disentangle the confusion of that Record than by following the other course. To master technicality one must be a master of it; a position which can only be obtained by a careful and thorough study of all materials available, whatever value may afterwards, and as a result of such consideration, be attributed to them. We have, however, not considered it necessary to deal with two portions of the Code as we have with the rest. These are O. XXXIV. and the Second Schedule containing the Arbitration Rules, The Order is, with some amendments, substantially a reproduction of former sections of the Transfer of Property Act relating to mortgages. These have been already sufficiently treated of in the able hooks of Dr. Rash Behary Ghose and Dr. Gonr on the subject. The arbitration sections of the former Code have, with some slight alterations, been incorporated in the Second Schedule as a temporary measure only, the Legislature having expressed its intention of shortly dealing with the subject afresh in a separate Act. We have, therefore, in these circumstances, only recorded the cases decided since the date of the last edition of the late Mr. Justice O'Kinealy's Civil Procedure Code.

We have said that the Code is, to a large extent, what it was. At the same time it is to be noted that a considerable number of important amendments have been made which x will be found explained in the Commentary. The chief merit of the new Code is that these amendments, and the general scheme of which they form a part, recognize principles which we think make for the effective administration of justice. In this country both the litigants and Courts are apt to attribute excessive importance to what is but the mint, the anise, and the cummin of the law. Procedure is not, as seems sometimes to be supposed, an end in itself, but merely the machinery by which the Court does its work. Nextly, as it is not possible to foresec every contingency which may arise, it is not possible to provide such a machinery as will be effective to meet every want. The terms of the law itself must therefore be flexible. and to the Judges should be given a wide discretion in its administration. Freedom of action, if given, will often enable them to deal justly with eases which the most skilfully constructed provision may fail to meet. The Legislature has recognized that it is not possible to frame a fixed and rigid Code in such a manner as to sufficiently meet the varying needs of an area so diversified as that to which the Code applies. The provisions as to rules enable such variations to be introduced as may be necessary. To the latter are relegated matters of mere machinery. As they now stand they continue substantially, though with important amendments, the former state of things. But the High Courts may add to or alter them as necessity requires. Those provisions only are retained in the body of the Code in which some degree of permanence and uniformity has been considered desirable. In the amendments introduced an endeavour has been made to state general rules of procedure rather than to provide in detail for every possible contingency. The Select Committee very rightly state that they hold it "to be a sound view that excessive elaboration of details of procedure tends to cramp the action of the Court, and in eonsequence to encourage technicalities." Limitations have in several instances been removed, such as those which existed on the scope of shits (the issues in which, however, are to be clearly defined), the power of remand, powers in second appeal, and so forth. Technical objections to jurisdiction, misjoinder, and the like are sought to be iliscouraged, and greater powers of amendment are given. A wider discretion is given to the Judges, the Select Committee observing that "the principles of procedure are now so well understood that the Courts may be trusted to apply them intelligently in cases for which no provision may be made in terms." Stuart, C.J., once spoke of those "who refused to know anything about procedure beyond the letter of the Code itself" (5 A. 522). The present Code, on the other hand, recognizes in sect. 152 the inherent jurisdiction of the Court to do what is right where the Legislature has failed to make provision for any particular ease which may arise. It will be no longer possible to say that the Court can do nothing, though justice requires it to do something simply because the Code is silent on, or there is no reported decision in which a Judge has had to deal with the point raised. "Procedure," said Lord Penzance, "is but the machinery of the law after all-the channel and means whereby law is administered and justice reached. It strangely departs from its proper office when, in place of facilitating, it is permitted to obstruct and even extinguish legal rights, and is thus made to govern where it ought to subscree" (L. R. 4 App. Cas 525). It will be well also to bear in mind the dicta of the Judicial Committee that they will look to the essential justice of the case without considering whether matters of form have been strictly attended to (2 M. I. A. 344), and that (6 M. I. A. 410, 411) it is of the ntmost importance that the Courts of this country shall constantly bear in mind that by their very constitution they are to decide according to equity and good conscience, and that the substance and merits of the ease are to be kept constantly in view.

"Consolidate and amend'—The Code is a consolidating Act. The method of construction to be adopted in the case of such a Code has been expounted by Lord Herschell (1) in terms which have been adopted by the Privy Council (2) and cited and applied in other cases in this country (3) Dealing with the largist hills of Lychango Act, which was intended to be a Code of the Law relating to negatially instruments, he said—

"I think the proper course is in the first instance, to examine the language of the statute and to ask what is its natural meaning, uninfluenced by any con sideration derived from the recious state of the lase and not to start with inquiring how the law previously stood and then assuming that it was probably intended to leave it unaftered, to see if the words of the enactment will bear an inter pretation in conformity with this view. If a statute intended to embody in a code a particular branch of the law is to be treated in this fashion it appears to me that its utility will be almost entirely destroyed, and the very object with which it was enacted will be frustrated. The purpose of such a statute surely was that, on any point specifically dealt with by it the law should be ascertained by interpreting the language used, instead of as before, by roaming over a vist number of authorities in order to discover what the law was extracting it by a minute critical examination of the prior decisions dependent upon a know ledge of the exact effect even of an obsolete proceeding such as a demurrer to evidence I am of course, far from asserting that recourse nay never be had to alle precious state of the law for the purpose of aiding in the construction of the processions of the Code If, for example, a provision be of doubtful import, such resort would be perfectly legitimate, or, again, if in a code of the law of negotiable instruments, words be found which have previously acquired a technical meaning or been used in a sense other than their ordinary one in relation to such instru ments, the same interpretation might well be put upon them in the Code I give these as examples merely, they, of course do not exhaust the category however, I am venturing to insist upon is that ile first step taken should be to interpret the language of ile statute, and that an appeal to earlier decisions can only be justified on some special ground '(1)

It has been said that a reference to the previous history of the law and legislation on the subject is one of the means by which a Court is entitled to seek assistance in construing an act of the Legislature (a) And the practice of the Calcutta, Madras and Bombry High Courts has been to consider as aids towards construction the history of the transition of an Act through the Legislature and to refer to the Reports of Law Commissioners Proceedings of the Legislature Council, Reports of Select Committees, Draft of Bills and

Statement of Objects and Reasons The Privy Council have, however, in the case of the Administrator-General of Bengal v. Prem Lall Mullick.(1) observed upon the use of these means of interpretation, expressing their disapproval of the practice of referring to the proceedings of the Legislature which result in the passing of an Act A large number of decisions exist upon this question, which is one of some difficulty.(2)

It is, no doubt, a well-established rule of construction that when the terms of an Act are clear and plain, it is the duty of the Court to give effect to them as they stand, according to their plain meaning, neither adding to, nor subtracting from them The Legislature must be taken to have intended to mean what it has so plainly expressed, and when the terms of an Act admit of but one incaning a Court is not at liberty to speculate on the intent of the Legislature, or to construe them according to its own notions of the reasons supposed to have been the cause of its enactment (3) The primary question, in short, is not what may he supposed to have been intended, but what has been said (4) Where, however, an Act has been considered not to clearly express the intention of the Legislature, it has for some years been the practice of the Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay High Courts (5) to consider (as aids towards construction) : (A) The history of previous Legislation, (6) (B) and of the transition of an Act through the Legislature, viz -

And there is no legislation subsequent to that of 1874, with respect to the power of an executor to make over his office with all its rights and habilities to the Administrator-General, '(6) and (n) that it is against reason and authority to insintum the proposition, "that in dealing with a Consolidating Statute, each engetment must be traced to its original source, and when that is discovered, must be construed according to the state of circumstances which existed when it first became law. The very object of consolidation is to collect the statutory law bearing upon a particular subject and to bring it down to date, in order that it may form a useful code applicable to the circumstances existing at the time when the Consolidating Act is passed"(7) With regard to (b) and (c), the Privy Council observed as follows -(8) "The two learned Judges who constituted the majority in the Appellate Court, although they do not base their judgments upon them, refer to the proceedings of the Legislature which resulted in the passing of the Act of 1871, as legitimate aids to the construction of sect 31 Their Lordships think

The question next to be considered is how far, if at all, does this decision of the Privy Council affect the practice of the Indian Courts to which reference has been made. The result of their Lord-lines decision appears to be as follows.

it right to express their dissent from that proposition has been made. The result of their Lordships decision appears to be as follows—

(1) Pre-existing legislation may still be referred to as an aid towards construction, (4) subject to this that (a) if the terms of an his are d ar positine, and express, they cannot be modified or neutralized by inductions of intention to be gathered from previous legislation upon the same subject, (b) that in the case of a Consolidating Act, it must be construed not with reference to the executive access existing at the time of the preceding dets but in relation to those existing at the time of the Consolidating let (10). This list datum it is conceived, refers to cases where the two sets of excumstances differ (1) In all cases, how ever, the proper course is in the first instance to examine the language of the Act, uninfluenced by considerations as to the previous state of the law, and to resort to a consideration of the latter only if the meaning of the Act itself he not cloar

(u) Reports of the Indian Law Commissioners -These were not referred to in the lower Court, and the Privy Council have said nothing directly as to They have however, indicated that the law in these matters should be the same as that which prevails in England, and according to this test reference is permissible See Lord Westbury s view in the case of In re-Mew, cited ante, p 5 p (1) In the ease of Chini Lal Mancherom a Manishankar Atmaram (2) the Bombay High Court in dealing with the Easements Act referred to the recommendations of the Law Commission

(m) Proceedings of the Legislative Council -Upon a reference to some of the terms of the Privy Couocil judgmeet, it would seem that reference to these is not oow permissible But in the cose of In re New. (3) the Lord Chancellor read a speech made in the House of Commons by the member who introduced the Bankruntev Bill of 1860 The Privy Council itself also in Hebbert ; Purchas (4) referred to the Commons' and Lords' Journals and to the details of a conference between the two Houses of Parliament And in the Queen t Bishop of Oxford (5) Bramwell, J. read passages from the Lord Chancellor's Speech made in the House of Lords upon the Church Discipline Act Bombay High Court has, however, since held that it is not permissible to refer to the speech of the Legal Member of the Indian Legislative Council when proposing the enactment of a bill (6)

(1) Reports of Select Committees of the Legislative Council - These were referred to by the High Court in The Administrator General & Prem Lall Mulhek The Privy Council must, therefore, it seems he taken to have disapproved of the reference to those reports, though reverting again to the English rule upon which the Privy Couocil rested their judgment, it appears that Sir George Turner, LJ in Drummood v Drummond (7) referred to tho proceedings of a Select Committee of which he had been a member. In the case of Assam . Pathumma (8) the Madras High Court referred to the report of a Select Committee

(v) Diaft Stages of a Bill -These were not referred to in the principal case either in the judgments of the High Court or Privy Council But they appear to fall within the principle of exclusion laid down by the latter, and ticilar rule contended for is not to be found among the previously existing laws. It is sufficient if the provision relied upon is a part of the Act, whatever the description of the purposes of the Act may be Daimodden Puk t Kaim Tarilar, 5 C 300 303 (1879)

there is but little anthority to be found for their use. In Chinni Lal Man charmi t. Manishankar Atimaran (1) the Court referred to the Drafts of the Pasements Bills of 1879 and 1881, as also to the opinions of the draftsman of the first mentioned bill.

(vi) Statements of Objects and Reasons - These were referred to by the High Court in the principal ease, and the Privy Council must, therefore, it seems, be tallen to have disapproved of their use. The attachment of a state ment of objects and reasons to a bill being a procedure peculiar to this country there is no English authority upon the point. The preside of an Act, which may be referred to, affords the nearest analogy. But if there be any grounds for the admission of reports of Select Committees or proceedings of the Legislative Council, it certainly seems that strong grounds also exist for the admissibility of these statements. In the case of the Delha and London Bank to Hem Lall Dutt (-) Travely and J., referred to the Objects and Reasons of the Pasements Act, for the purpose of seeing whit was the law at the time, and in the case of Chum Lall Mancharan w Manishankar Atmaran, (3) Candy, J., also referred to the statement of Objects and Reasons.

The Priva Council decision has been shortly referred to by the Calcutta

The Priva Council decision has been shortly referred to by the Calcutta High Court in the case of the Queen Impress * Sri Churn Chungo (1) where Prot. I (Prinsep and Macpherson, JJ, concurring) said "We do not promose to consider the history of the Penal Code from its original draft by Lord Macaulay in 1810, to its becoming law in 1860. Their Lordships of the Priva Chuncil, in the recent case of the Administrator General of Bengal * Prem Lall Mullick, have held that it is not competent to refer to proceedings of the Legislature in Sectionary of the Priva Council was also referred to by the Bombay High Court in R * Gangadhar Thal (5) in which it was broadly stated that it is inadmissible to take as an aid in constraing an Act the proceedings in the Legislative Council which is sulted in the pis ing of that Act

In this case and whether or not admissible to construct he Acts to which to construct the Acts of the Legislature are instructive historically, if one has to consider not what the statute says but what may have been the motives of one or other party in promoting the legislation (6). And there is but little doubt that there will be a continued reference to such Acts of not as technical at any rate as private as Is towards the comprehension of the intention of the Legislature.

The primary que tien in each case is of course. What are the firsts? It is however in continent full in this country to disting in the facts of near in I y are of and each of (7).

The next que tion is What are the mer Is of the Cab ata If?

The Act must be taken as one continuous Code, the different sections being simultaneously enacted in view of each other (1) The Court must be goveroed by the language of the Legislature without considering what may have been its intention, if the words themselves are clear (2) Its limited function is not to say what the Legislature meant, but to ascertain what the Legislature has said that it meaot (3) It is always dangerous to paraphrase ao coactment, and not the less so if the enactment is perhaps out altogether happily expressed (4) Where the Code contains provisions upon a particular question, it must be tested, not by general principles but by the expressions of the Code which relate to that question (5) Where two procedures or two remedies are provided, one of them must not be taken as operating in derogatioo of the other (6) In many cases reference has to be made to judicial precedeot. For it is a priociple neculiar to the Eoglish Common Law (7) that a decided case has an authoritative and hinding force and is, subject to certain well-known limitations, to be followed in other similar cases. It is, however, an unfortunate circumstance that the greater hulk of the reported Indian cases deal with questions of adjective law, unfortunate because a great divergency of opinion, such as exists touching the interpretation of rules of procedure, limitation, stamp or registration, is to be avoided, involving, as it does, uncertainty in the administration of justice and an encouragement of appeals, which in many cases are due to the hope entertained of overturning the judgments of the lower Courts, not upon the merits, but upon some technicality or other (8)

In this country the use of judicial precedent frequently leads to abuse

Every case is independent of every other, and no decision upon facts forms a precedent for any other decision. And every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the ease in which such expressions are found. A case is only an authority for what it actually decides It cannot be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it (9) "The only use of nuthorities or decided cases is the establishment of some principle which the Judge can follow out in deciding the case before him "(1) Lord Mansfield, CJ, said, ' It certainly is very hard upon a Judge if a rule which he generally lays down is to be taken up and carried to its full extent This is sometimes done by counsel, who have nothing else to rely upon; but great caution ought to be used by the Court in extending such maxims to cases which the Judge who uttered them never had in contemplation If such is the use to be made of them, I ought to be very cautious how I lay down general maxims from the Bench "(2)

It is well to bear the remarks cited in the last paragraph in mind, though, of course, the nature of procedure law does not always admit of their applica tion In many cases the rules are of an artificial and arbitrary character. though in others, such as those dealing with bar by judgment or by suit and the like, questions of principle are widely involved

As Holloway, J, said, the application to practical life of sound principles presents no more difficulty than that of empirical maxims (or, we may add, caso law), based mainly upon a misunderstanding (or lack of understanding) of the great practical jurists, whom all admit to be the only guides (3)

In Sadasna Pillai v Ramalinga Pillai, (1) the Privy Council said. "The alleged consensus of the Indian Courts being thus established, their Lordships, whatever their opinion upon the construction of this clause might have been, had the question been resulted and not think it would be right to run counter to so long a course of decision upon what is in fact merely a question of procedure, it being admitted that the plaintiff may assert rights of this nature, if they exist, in a separate suit."

"It is the duty of a Judge not to declare what he considers the law ought to be, but to decide what, according to the best of his judgment, he finds it is; and if he finds a principle laid down upon competent authority it is far better to accept and apply it broadly and honestly, even if he is not in his own mind satisfied with the foundation of the rule, than to attempt to fritter it away in its application to cases which manifestly come within it "(2). The reasons, however, which Judges have assigned for their opinions have not the same degree of authority as the decisions themselves (3) As regards these, if two cases are not to be reconciled, the authority which is at once the more recent and the more consistent with general principles ought to prevail (4) As already stated, if a principle is laid down upon competent authority it is far better to accept and apply it broadly and honestly, even if the Judge is not in his own mind satisfied with the foundation of the rule, than to attempt to fritter it away in its application to eases which manifestly come within it (5) The same rule applies when dealing with the provisions of the Code itself "We ought not," said Sir Barnes Peacock, CJ, "to fritter away the law by construing words according to a mere technical sense instead of giving them a broad meaning so as to embraco all cases intended by the Legislaturo to be provided for ' (6)

The Courts here must be guided in the first place by the terms of the Code itself, and, secondly, by those decisions of the Indian Courts which interpret the Code and which are binding on them. ruling will do well in following the decisions, if any, of other High Courts and Chief Courts in India As regards the High Courts themselves, Norris, J, sitting on the Original Side of the Court, said with reference to a decision of an Appellate Bench of the same Court, that though he was not prepared to say that he should consider every judgment of an Appellate Bench building upon him when sitting on the Original Side, yet every such judgment should receive respectful consideration and careful attention and should be followed, unless the Court was very clearly of opinion that the conclusion arrived at was an errongous one (1) As regards Appellate Benches all are bound by decisions of the Privy Council and by Full Benches of the same Court and if one Appellate Bench differs from a previous decision given by another the matter must be referred for determination of a Full Bench (2) The High Court is, however, not bound by, though it will give respectful consideration to, the decisions of another High Court As regards other countries, reference may be made to English case law, when in point, as also to the decisions of those countries such as the United States.(3) whose law is derived from a common source with our own As regards, however, the decisions of the United States Courts, citation should not be generally approved unless where it is shown to be necessary by reason of the novelty of the point involved and the want of Indian or English pre cedents (4) As regards these latter it has no doubt, been said that "the Code of Civil Procedure does not prevail in England, and we must interpret its terms as best we may without reference to English cases"(5) It 19, however, submutted with all respect that this is neither a correct nor useful view of the matter. The Courts in this country can ill afford to disregard the results of the learning and experience of the English Judges for the most part they have been glad to avail themselves of both has been where either general legal principles are involved-principles of common application in all countries, or in those in which English notions of jurispriidence prevail-or in cases where sundar provisions to those pre valling here oxist elsewhere, as in the case of many sections of the Code which are based upon or taken from the English rules under the Indicature Act. a maxim expressing a principle recognized by the laws of all civilized countries. it did not afford a rule applicable to circumstances of the same character in India (1) So also. West, J. 10 delivering the judgment of the Full Bench (2) dealing with a question arising under sect 622 of the former Code, said "In such a conflict of opinions as has prisen on the subject we are now considering, it may be useful to see how similar questions have been dealt with by the Courts in Eugland Their decisions can, of course, only afford analogies, not precedents, for Courts so differently constituted as those in Iudia, but these analogies poiot to principles of general application, and thus repay our attentive consideration. As niready stated, many of the provisions of the Code are taken from the English Rules and Orders, and there is no reason why the decisions given on those Rules and Orders should not be applicable here, or on such portions of them as are of equal application in this country and in England Where a priociple declared in an English decision does not depend on any peculiarity in Eoglish law it may be applicable here (3) Again, where a Colonial Legislature has passed an Act in the same terms as an Imperial Statute, and the latter bus been authoritatively construed by a Court of Appeal in England, such construction should be adented by the Courts of the Colony.(1) though, of course, when the Indian Legislature has rejected or declined to follow the law of England upon a particular neut the case is altogether different (5)

It cannot, however, be too much insisted upon that procedure is more Its rules should be observed, but it is to be remembered that those rules exist to enable the Courts, in a settled and convenient manner, to dispense justice. Mere techni ality is to be avoided therefore as much as possible This does not mean that the provisions of the Code are to be disregarded, but they are tu be construed liberally, and if found to have been infringed it must be seen whether such infringement has affected the juris diction of the Court or the ments of the case (6) Courts of law should be especially eareful in dealing with technical objections to see what effect their decision will have in defeating substantial justice (7) The Court may how ever find itself constrained to set aside nn order on a ground which his unfortunately no relation to the merits of the case, as for want of jurisdiction, even though no objection has been taken by the parties (1) So in the case now cited,(2) the Privy Council said "This objection to the award was apparently not brought to the notice either of the Suhordinate Judge or of the High Court But the statute is there, and the Judges were bound to take judicial notice of it " And the Court is bound to take indicial notice of a change in the Statutory Law while a suit is pending, and a party is not estopped from calling attention to it, since the Court is taken to have known it (3) And though it is exceedingly undesirable that any suit should fail on account of any technical objection, such, for instance, as that of misjoinder, at the same time when the objection is raised at the earliest opportunity, and when serious inconvenience and expense are likely to he caused to the parties, it is impossible for the Courts not to adjudicate upon the objection, and to reheve the parties from it (4) Rules of procedure are, however, mere machinery, the means by which the Courts are enabled to dispense the justice for which they exist. As the Privy Council have said, it is of the utmost importance to the right administration of justice in the Courts of this country that it should be constantly horne in mind by them that by their very constitution they are to decide according to equity and good con-cience, and that the substance and merits of the case are to be kept constantly in view (5) Again, Lord Penzance said (6) "Procedure is but the machinery of the law after all-the channel and means wherehy law is administered and justice reached. It strangely departs from its proper office when, in place of freilitating, it is permitted to obstruct, and even extinguish, legal rights, and is thus made to govern where it ought to subserve "

The Code is not exhaustive.—The Code is not exhaustive. It is not uncommonly thought that it is sufficient to defeat an application or to reverse an order that no particular section of the Code can be eited as an authority for it. It is true that Stracley, CJ,(7) stated that the Code contained the whole law of Chul Procedure. We are not, however, aware of any other authority to this effect, and that observation was not adopted by Banerjee, J, in the same case, and both in earlier and liter cases in the same Court it wis held that the Code was not exhaustive (8). The latter view, it is submitted, is unloubtedly the correct one, and is supported by numerous cases to which reference will be made. Indeed, in one of these, Mahinood J, said (9). "I may therefore at the outset state that, according to my view of the rules of construction applicable to statutes like the Civil Procedure Code, the Courts it, not to act upon the principle that every procedure is to be talent.

As n matter of several principle, uro labely me cannot be uses uncel and in the recent case, therefore, it rests upon the defendants to show that the suit in the furni in which it has been brought is problemed by the rules of procedure numberable to the Courts of Justice in Inlia (I) This statement, if it is not to be liable to miscon cention, is in need of explanation and qualification. It is not to be supposed that it was intended to warrant any and every tule of procedure which a Court may arbitrarily choose to device or to follow. It has been already nounted out (2) that the Cole is exhaustive on the natters in respect of which it declares the law, that is on any point execut colly deelt with by it, the law must be ascertained by reference to its provisions. The Code, however, is not exhaustive in the sense that for instance, the Lydence Act has been and to be, the around artion of which, it has been held, in effect, prohibits the introduction of any kird of evidence not specifically authorized by the Act itself. The Code hands the Court so fir as it goes (3). If it prescribes a particular course, in a particular case, that course must be taken. If, on the other hand, as in the case of the former section 561 (non-omitted), it contains in express problettion, the latter must be given effect to. Many matters are dealt with under a settled practice (1) But even such a practice however inveterate a unnot be legal if it is contrary to an express engetment or is meansistent with it (5) It was however pointed out by Wilson, J., in the case cited.(6) that if the Court had power before the introduction of the Code to make an order, and that power is not expressly taken away by the Code. it must remain (1) So it was held in that case, that although Chapter XXVI of the former Code only provided for suits to be brought by a pauper, the Court had yet power to allow a defendant to defend in forma pauperis So also in a case (2) which dealt with the inquiry into the question of minority, where a suit was brought by a person professing himself to be adult, but demed to be such by the defendant, upon which an issue was raised for trial, the Court pointed out that sect 442 of the former Code did not apply to the case, which was not provided for by the Code It however referred to the practice which prevailed before the Code was passed, and held that that practice had not been abrogated by any provision in the Code, and must be considered to be in force (3) As regards, therefore, matters not specifically dealt with by the Code, the Courts are empowered to act under and according to their original powers and practice Cases may, however, arise for which no provision can be found, either in the Code or in previous enactments or practice. As the Code does not affect previously existing powers expressly given and acted upon, neither does it affect the power and duty of the Court to act according to the well known rule (governing alike the rules of substantivo and adjective law (4)) in cases where no specific enactment exists, according to justice, equity, and good conscience. Court has therefore in many cases, where the circumstances require it acted upon the assumption of the possession of an inherent power to do that justice for the administration of which it alone exists (5) So it has been held that or to restere to its files any ease which the Court has itself removed therefrom un letermined, as where a case has been struck off under a misapprehension that the parties had settled it (I) It has been held that if sect 206 of that Code did not amily, the Court exercising appellate inrisdiction had an inherent mirisdiction to I ring its decrees into accordance with its judgments,(2) and that although se t 463 of that Code applied only to cases where persons have been adjudged hundres under the statute, and was silent as to persons not so adjudged, the Court would in the interest of justice (the provisions of Chapter XXXI of the former Code not being exhaustivel, abnoint guardians ad litem of such persons, and allow them to sue by next friends (3) A Court has inherent inisdiction to amend the plant and decree.(1) and to allow a set off of costs against nurchase money in a case not provided for by sect 211 of that Cole (i) So also it was held that though there was no special provision in the Cole enabling the Court to refuse, on the ground of traud, to confirm a sale, such as there was in the case of irregularity, neither was there any provision declaring that the Court should not have such a power, that there was no necessity for any special provision, and that if a Court were nowerless to repress frond, and was bound to rathly it, "equity and good conscience," the leading principles of administration of the law, are violated, and the Court had inherent jurisdiction to refuse to confirm the sale (6) The Court has an inherent power to present an aliuse of its processes and is competent to reverse an order made in the absence of the opposite party without service of notice upon him, and which the law directs should be served (7)

What has been said applies generally. Other questions arise in regard to the original sule of the High Court, which has inherited all the jurisdiction and powers of the Supreme Court (8). It has been held that the powers of the High Court in its original Civil Jurisdiction are not limited in all cases to those given by the Code, and in many respects its procedure is peculiar to itself (9).

These instances (and there are doubtless others) are sufficient to show. firstly, that the Code is not exhaustive, there being matters with which it does not deal, and that in such cases the Court will, in the absence of any other express provision, exercise that inherent jurisdiction to do such justice between the parties as the nature of the case requires There are, however, cases in which a question may arise whether the exercise of a power or the right to make an application is derived entirely from express legislation So the right of appeal must be given by the enacted law, or equivalent authority,(1) and it has been debated whether a question of costs is one of procedure or one affecting vested rights,(2) in which case it was held that the power to award costs was derived entirely from Acts of the Legislature As pointed out, however, by Sir Barnes Peacock, CJ, the laws cannot make express provision against all inconveniences, so that their dispositions shall express all the cases that may possibly happen, and it is therefore the duty of a Judge to apply them, not only to what appears to be regulated by their express provisions, but to all the cases to which a just application of them may be made, and which appear to be comprehended either within the express sense of the law, or within the consequences that may be gathered from it (3) So as is well known, sects 11-14 (formerly 13 and 14), of the Codo do not embody the entire rule of res judicata, which as a principle exists independently of the statute enacting it, and indeed, even as regards sect 13 itself (now sect 11), it has been said that it cannot be applied too literally (4) The principle has therefore been applied to cases with which the Code does not expressly deal (5) In the undermentioned case, (6) Blur, J, said that there are cases of misfeasance grosser than anything provided for in the Code, and that he declined to believe that those are cases where a High Court must fold its hands and allow obvious injustice to be done. At the same time, it is well to bear in mind the observations of Sir John Edge, CJ, adopted by Sir John Stanley, CJ "Justice, equity, and good conscience," he said, "are captivating terms, and before a Judge applies what may appear to him at first sight to be in accordance with justice, equity, and good conscience, he must be careful to see that his views are based on sound general principles and High Court to say, "It is quite true that the lower Court had no power to make the order, but we will the power given by clause 15 is not an original but a superintending power. It resumes that the subordinate Court had jurisdiction but has wrongly declined to exercise it. If the subordinate Court had jurisdiction it is because of the inherent power and duties cast upon it by the rule which binds it to act in all cases where no specific provision exists according to equity, justice, and good conscience. It has been recently held that proceedings on applications for enhancement of rent under sect 27 of the Choix Nagpur Tenancy Act (Beng. VI of 1908) are judicial proceedings, and the Deputy Commissioners in performance of their duties under that Act are Courts subject to the appellate juri-diction of the High Court, which has jurisdiction to interfere when the Courts of Collectors bave either exceeded, or failed or refused to exercise, the jurisdiction vested in them by that Act (1)

Inherent jurisdiction—The inherent jurisdiction of the Court to which reference has been made in the last paragraph has now been expressly recognized in sect 151 of the present Code

"The laws '—In the under mentioned case,(2) Stuart, C J, speaking of this expression as occurring in the Preamble of the preceding Code, ob erred that it meant all the laws in operation at the time of the passing of the Code including the General Clauses Act of 1868, but, as has been pointed out (3) this is not correct, as the expression must be used with the words "relating to the procedure,' etc., and the General Clauses Act cannot be deemed a law "relating to the procedure of the Courts of Civil Judicature'.

"Courts of Civil Judicature"—Subject to what is hereinafter stated, the Preamble shows that the Code applies to all Courts of Civil Judicature. Its provi ions will therefore govern the procedure of all Civil Courts in British India, subject to the provisions contained in this preliminary portion of the Code and to any other special Act providing a special procedure for proceedings under it. The general power to entertain suits of a Civil nature except suits of which coenizance is barried by any chactment does not include a general power to make declarations (4). The Act applies to suits in the ordinary civil juri-diction. As to other case, see the following paragraphs.

Special jurisdiction. (a) Insolvency jurisdiction.—In obvency procedure is civil procedure. Insolvency procedure governing the Provincial Courts was formerly dealt with in the Code, but is now the subject of a reparate Act (III of 1991). The modern via populable to the Province Tewn of Cal min Malma and Le play, is contained in 11 & 12 Vit to 21 (1848). Judges of the High Court (called the Commissioner in Insolvency), and the High Court and any such Judge thereof shall have and exercise within the Bengal Division of the Presidence of Fort William and the Presidency of Madras and Bombay respectively, such powers and nuthorities with respect to original and appellite jurisdiction and otherwise as are constituted by the laws relating to insolvent debtors in India. The Insolvent Court in the Presidency Towns is constituted by a separate Act of Parhament. It is a Civil Court existing for the purpose of giving reliof to persons unable to pay their debts. By the Royal Charter Act, 1861 (24 & 25 Vict. c. 104), upon the establishment of the High Courts the Sunreme Courts were abolished In 1862 and 1865 Letters Patent were granted The Insolvent Court was not then merged in the High Court, but continued in existence side by side with the High Court The appeal to the Supreme Court (Iusolvent Act, sect 73) and the power to make rules (ib sect 76), were transferred to the High Court (1) But though the Insolvent Court is a separate tribunal from the High Court it nevertheless stands in such a special relation to the High Court that a limitation or exclusion of the latter's jurisdiction may indirectly limit or evelude its own (2) Sect 5 of the Insolvent Act gives the jurisdiction, which is that of the Supreme Court Sect 18 of the Letters Patent declares the jurisdiction to be that constituted by the laws relating to Insolvent Debtors in India But under clause 44 of the Letters Patent this is subject to the Legislative powers of the Indian Government Therefore when Act V of 1872 declared that the High Court at Bembay had no jurisdiction in Sind it was held that the petition must be dismissed, though the Insolvent was a European British subject (3) But the Supreme Court's jurisdiction was twofold-local as regards the inhabitants of the cities and personal as regards European British subjects residing in any part of the territories subject to the Presidency Governments So it was held that an European British subject residing in the Bombay Presidency but outside the local limits of the High Court's jurisdiction, was entitled to netition . (4) and that though the personal jurisdiction did not now exist as regards civil actions, it had not been interfered with as regards the Insolvent Court This would appear also to have been the view of Percock CJ (5) but not of Markby, J (6) though in the latter case the actual decision was that the jurisdiction of the Insolvent Court was limited to the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William that is Bengal proper the petitioner's permanent residence being in the North Western Provinces

The Insolvent Court is a Civil Court ats proceedings are civil proceedings and (as was apparent from Chapter X of the former Code now repealed) its procedure is Civil Procedure But under sect 120 nothing in this Code extends or applies to any Judge of a High Court in the exercise of jurisdiction as in Insolvent Court (1) Orders in insolvency are not orders under the Code of Civil Procedure They are orders under a special law, but they are under a special law in which different procedure is provided (2) Execution is not taken out from this Court as it has ne machinery for the purpose Formerly the Insolvent Court availed itself of the machinery of the Supreme Court as auxiliary to its own Subject to the provisions of the Charter Act and Letters Patent, the High Court exercises the same jurisdiction, took over all the work, and inherited all the powers that vested in the Supreme Court, whose jurisdiction it superseded. The Inselvency Act, however, has nothing to do with precedure in execution, which is governed by the Civil Procedure Code (3) So although the Insolvent Court determines the substance of the questions relating to the insolvent's estate, the proceedings in execution and the judgment are the High Court's Thus a judgment entered up under sect 86 of the Insolvent Act, in the name of the Official Assignee against the insolvent, is entered up in the ordinary jurisdiction of the High Court (4) The Previncial Inselvency Act does not interfere with any right of appeal to the Privy Council which may otherwise exist (5)

(b) Admiralty jurisdiction -The ides regulating Admiralty practice were framed when the Code of 1859 was in ferce Rule 54 directs that preceedings not previded for by the rules shall be regulated by the rules and practice of the High Court in suits brought in it in the exercise of its ordinary original civil jurisdiction The Code applies to proceedings on the Admiralty side of the High Court, sect 645A of the former Code was held to show that this is so (6) In Vice Admiralty cases, the effect of appearance, the mode of objecting to the jurisdiction, and the mode of questioning the validity of a pleading, (7) the admission of appeals (8) and costs (9) are matters governed by a settled practice under the Code, the Privy Council rules issued under Statute 2 & 3 Wm IV c 51, having no operation, except in case of suits in rem in which ne appearance has been entered, and of other matters to which the Code cannot be applied (10) Though the Admiralty rules de not apparently contemplate a suit in rem and in personam being combined, they do not expressly or by necessary implication forbid it (11) In a case such as an application for consolidation not provided for hy either the Rules or the Code, the practice of the Court of Admiralty in England ought to be followed, so far as such practice can be applied to this country by analogy (12)

(c) Testamentary and intestate jurisdiction -the procedure in testamentary and intestate jurisdiction whether in the High Court (1) or Proxincial Courts, is governed by the Indian Succession Act. (A. of 18(5). and the Probate and Administration Act (V of 1881), and by these Acts the proceedings in relation to the granting of probate and letters of administration ire except as in those Acts otherwise provided, to be regulated, so fir as the circumstances of the ease will admit, by this Code (2) In any case in which there is contention the proceedings shall take, as nearly as may be the form of a regular suit according to the provisions of this Code, in which the netitioner for probate or letters of administration, as the case may be is the plaintiff and the person who may have appeared to oppose the grant is the defendant (3) Although a petition before a caveat has been entered is not suit in the ordinary acceptation of the term sect 647 of the former Code. which provided that the procedure for suits should be followed so far as it could be made applicable in all proceedings other than suits and appeals, made the provisions of the Code applies ble to all miscellaneous civil proceedings. Having therefore regard to this section and sects 238 261 of the Succession Act, it has been held that Chapter XXVI of the former Codo was applicable to petitions for probate (4) If the provisions of the Code are inconsistent with those of the Probate and Administration Act those of the Code must prevail as it is the later enactment (5)

The Code only applies so far as the circumstances of the cise admit, and though generally applieshle, the circumstances peculiar to testamentary cises must be considered. So though probate proceedings are generally regulated by the Code it was held in the undermentioned case that the Court was not justified under sect. 177 of the former Code (corresponding with O AVI r 20) in deeding against a carcator because he refused to answer a question and in dispensing with proof of the execution of the will though that section would be applicable under proper circumstances (6). So also unless a will is proved in some form no grant of probate can be made merely on the consent of parties. Hence an apreciment or compromise as regards the genuineness and due evecution.

(1) Mr Stokes in his Commentary on the Succession Act expresses an opinion that having regard to the definition of D strict Judgo in s 3 of that Act (and the same definition is repeated in the Probate and Administration Act) as the judge of a principal Civil Court of original jurisdiction this section applies to proceedings of High Courts in their testamentary and intestato jurisdiction and that their proceedings also must be regulated by this Code of Umrao Chande Bindraban Chand 17 A 475 (1895) In re Monohur Mookerjee 5 C 756 (1880) Escof Hasshim Dooply t Fatima Bibee 24 C 30 (1896) Yeshwant : Shankar, 17 B 388 (1892), In re the will of Dawubar 18 B 237 (1893) By the Rules of the Calcutta High Court the procedure in all cases is to

of a will if its effect is to exclude evidence in proof of the will, is not lawful within the meaning of O XXIII r 3, of this Code (1)

(d) Matrimonial jurisdiction—In the case of matrimonial causes as regards matters of procedure, all proceedings under the Indian Divorce Act between party and party are subject to the provisions therein contained to be regulated by this Code (2). Thus any question as to the time within which a respondent may file an answer to a petition is to be decided not by the Rules of the English Divorce Court but by the provisions of the Code dealing with written statements (3). But by sect 7 of the Indian Divorce Act, which does not apply to questions of procedure, (4) the Court is enabled to follow the principal rules of the English Divorce Act in all matters which are not expressly dealt with either in the Act itself or in the Code. Thus the Court has adopted Rule 158 of the English Rules and ordered a husband to give security for his wife's costs (5). In a recent case in the Bombay High Court where a Parst had married a Christian in London and had remained there it was held that the jurisdiction was limited to Christian subjects residing within the Presidency (6)

Special Courts (a) Small Cause Courts—See notes to sects 7 and 8, post These are Courts of inferior jurisdiction and when in a Presidency Town are subject to the order and control of the High Court (7)

(b) Mamlatdars' Court —The object of the Mamlatdars Act (Bom, Act III of 1876) was to consolidate and amend the law relating to the powers and procedure of Mamlatdars' Courts — The purpose of the Act was temporary only, and chiefly to provide for the cultivation of the land and to prevent breaches of the peace until the Civil Court should determine the rights of the disputants—and such being its purpose the procedure provided is of a very summary character (8) These Courts are Civil Courts and subject to the revisional jurisdiction of the High Court (9) The Act however provides a special procedure and there is no indication in it of any intention that the rules of this Code should apply to cases for which the special procedure makes no provision. The provisions of the Code therefore do not apply to such Courts in Rombay (1)

(c) Revenue Court -The term is defined in sect 5 clause (2), nost, which see There is a distinction between Rent Courts and Civil Courts as referred to m the Rent Acts. Civil Courts being Courts exercising all the powers of Civil Courts as distinguished from the Rent Courts, which only exercise powers over suits of a lumited class But a Rent Court is a Civil Court in the sense that it decides civil questions between persons seeking their civil rights (2) It has therefore been a question in certain cases whether Rent Courts being Civil Courts in the latter sense their procedure is, in the absence of any special provision, governed by the Code. The answer to this question is to be determined not so much by an inquiry into the ques tion whether they are Civil Courts, but whether, assuming they are such. the provisions of the Acts constituting those Courts do not exclude the provisions of the Code, in other words are those Acts complete Codes in them selves or are they governed in matters upon which they are silent by the Code? This question, which has arisen with respect to Act XII of 1881 and Act X of 18.9 is dealt with no t

In the majority of cases however, no such question can arise as most of the Tenancy Acts make special provision as regards the applicability of the Code to proceedings in Revenue Courts. In the case of Act XVIII of 1881 [Land Revenue Central Provinces) the Code does not of itself apply, but the Chief Commissioner may, with the previous sanction of the Governor General in Council make rules consistent with the Act for regulating the procedure of Revenue Officers in cases for which a procedure is not prescribed by the Act and may by any such rule direct that any provisions of the Code shall apply, with or without modification to all or any classes of cases before Revenue Officers (3)

The Panjab Tenancy Act (AVI of 1887) provides that the Local Covernment may, with the previous sanction of the Governor General make rules consistent with the Act for regulating the procedure of Revenue Courts in matters under the Act for which a procedure is not prescribed thereby and may by any such rule direct that any provisions of the Code shall apply with or without modification to all or any classes of cases before those Courts Until rules are made and subject to those rules when made and to the provisions of the Act, the Code shall so far as is apphicible apply to all proceedings in Revenue Courts whether before or after decree (4)

Tenancy Act (VIII of 1885), the High Court may from time to time, with the approval of the Governor General in Council, make rules consistent with that Act, declaring that any portions of the Code shall not apply to suits between landlord and tenant as such or to any specified classes of such suits, or shall apply to them subject to modifications specified in the rules. Subject to any rules so made, and subject also to the other provisions of the Bengal Tenancy Act, this Code shall apply to all such suits (1). Sects 121–127, 129, 305, 320–326 of the former Code and the corresponding sections of the present Code do not apply to suits for the recovery of rent, and special rules of procedure in respect of certain matters are prescribed for such suits (2). No rules have been made by the High Court declaring any portions of the Code mapplicable to suits between landlord and tenant.

The N W P Rent Act (XII of 1881) appears to contain complete rules of procedure upon the trial of rent suits under it, and it was the opinion of Stuart, C J, in the under mentioned case (3) that it was intended to exclude the provisions of the Code But it was beld by the Full Bench of the Alla habid High Court in that ease, that the Courts of Revenue in the North Western Provinces, in those matters of procedure upon which the Rent Act of these provinces is silent, are governed by the Code, and that therefore the procedure furnished by sects 43 and 373 of the former Cods was applicable to suits tried under the N W P Rent Act, 1881 (4) The grounds of that decision which is in fact, based upon the decision of the Privy Council in Nilmoni Singh Dec v Taranath Mukericc. (5) is that Revenue Courts are Courts of Civil Judicature within the meaning of the Code, and that unless exempted (which thoy were not) by the Code itself they would in all matters, except those in which special procedure is provided in the Rent Act, be governed by the law of the Civil Code The Full Bench decision does not apply where the Act provides a machinery of its own independent of the Civil Procedure Code, as in the case of references of suits to arbitration (6) And though the procedure prescribed by the Code, such as that prescribed by sect 285, of the former and sect 63 of the present Codo may be applicable as between Courts of Revenue of different grades, it cannot be applied where the conflict is between a Court of Revenue and a Civil Court (7)

A similar question arose as regards the Bengal Rent Act, X of 1859, which is still in force in certain places. Formerly it was held, following the Full Bench decision of the Allahabad High Court already referred to, that the

Revenue Courts in those matters of procedure, upon which the Act is silent. are governed by the Code, and that in consequence sect 43 of the former Code applied to a suit instituted under the Rent Act (1) The decision of the Priva Council in a preceding case (2) lends support to this view in so far as it was there held that though there was nothing in the Act which provided for execution beyond the Collectors' purisdiction, there was nothing in it to forbid the conclusion that such executions were left to the operations of Act XXXIII of 1852 (an Act to facilitate the enforcement of judgments in places beyond the purisdiction of the Courts pronouncing the same) or the corresponding portion of Act VIII of 1859 (Civil Procedure Code) When a decree for rent made by a Collector under sect 23. Act X of 1859, is transferred for execution to a Civil Court, no doubt the latter assuming the transfer to have been rabilly made will act under the procedure which governs it The Priva Council. however, went further and held that the Collector might make the transfer himself under the provisions of the Code which were applicable, there being nothing in the Rent Act to exclude them. It has however, subsequently been held, upon the authority of the reasoning in the Full Bench decision in Nagendro Nath Mullick t Mathura Mohun Parlu (3) that Act X of 18.99 is a Code complete in itself, and unaffected by the general laws of limitation and that therefore the provisions of this Code do not apply to cases under Act \ of 1859 (4) These eases proceed in substance upon certain of the grounds taken in the dissentient judgment in the Full Bench of the Allahabad High Court, viz that apart from the question whether Revenue Courts are Civil Courts, and Civil Courts within the meaning of the Code, the enactment of a special procedure in a special Act excluded the supposition that it was intended to import into that Act the provisions of the Code upon matters not dealt with hy that Act If it had been so intended it would have been so enacted, as was done in the subsequent Act of 1869 When however an appeal goes from a Collector to a higher Court, the decree which is given on appeal is the decree of a Civil Court, and a second appeal lies to the High Court, according to the same procedure which obtains in respect of second appeals in suits tried in the ordinary Civil Courts (5) In other words, the removal of the matter to a Civil Court brings it under the provisions regulating the procedure of that Court

In the case of a sale held under sect 110 Act X of 1859 it was held that sect 310A, of the former (corresponding to O AXI r 89, of the present) Code. did not apply, as the Code was applicable up to the sale and not after it (6)

The Code does not apply to cases under the Chota Nagpore Landlord and Tenant Procedure Act (7)

Apparently the Code is applicable in eases under the Wadras Rent-Recovery Act (1) But though seet 43 (O II r 2, of present Code) precludes a landlord from sung for ront not included in a previous suit, this does not preclude him from adopting any other remedy the law gives him to recover his rent, as for instance by distraint under the Rent Recovery Act (2)

The Code saves any law by a Governor or Lieutenant Governor prescribing a special procedure for suits between land holders and their tenants or agents, and gives power to the Local Government to modify the Code in its application to Revenue Courts See sects 4 and 5, post

Judicial discretion -The Code in many of its sections leaves matters dealt with thereby to the discretion of the Court "Discretion when applied to a Court of Law means discretion guided by law It must be governed by rule, and not by humour It must not be arbitrary, vague, and fanciful, but legal and regular' (3) In some sections the word "may ' occurs Great misconception is crused by saying that in some cases "may means "must" It never can mean 'must" so long as the English language retains its mean ing. but it gives a power, and then it may be a question in what cases, where n Judge has a power given him by the word "may ' it becomes his duty to overciso it (4)

Construction of act of Court - The assumption on which all rules of law are founded is that the constituted tribinals are furly competent to carry them out (5) According to the well known rule the Court may presume that judicial and official acts have been regularly performed (6) is to presume that a lower Court has done its duty neglect of duty cannot be assumed at the mere suggestion of an appellant (7) When an act of a Court can be so construed as to have an operation consistently with law, it would be contrary to ordinary rules of construction to attach to it another signification which would altogether destroy its effect (8) Courts, however, should take care that their orders are framed strictly in accordance with the provisions of the law (9) The presumption of regularity is a rebuttable one Irregularity may be shown, and a mistaken petition on the part of a pleader is no ground for the Courts passing an illegal order (10)

PRELIMINARY

(1) This Act may be cited as the Code of Civil Pio- is Short title, commence cedure, 1908 ment and extent (2) It shall come into force on the first day of January, 1909

(3) This section and sections 157 to 155 extend to the whole of British India the rest of the Code extends to the whole of British India except the Scheduled Districts

Local Extent (a) British India -These words evolude the territories of Native Princes and States in alliance with His Majesty, the relation between such Princes and His Matesty being a political relation and the territories of such Princes and States forming no part of the Butish Dominions although in a political point of view such Princes and States may be subordinate to the British Crown as the Paramount Power (1) They were formerly declared (2) to mean the territories for the time being vested in Hor Mulesty by the Statute 21 & 22 Vict c 106 (1858), other than the settlement of Prince of Wales' Island (Penang) Singapore and Malacea, and the first section of the statute there referred to vested in Her Majesty all territories then in the possession or under the Governments of the East India Company. and all territories which night become vested in Her Majesty by virtuo of the rights transferred to Her Majesty from the East India Company Apparently any new province acquired would become on its acquisition, part of British India (3), Cession of territory confers local jurisdiction (4). The term includes territories eeded "in full sovereignty" or 'in perpetuity there being no difference between the two (5) Prior to the General Clauses Act 1897, it was held not to include cases where as in the case of the British cantonment of Secunderabad, there has been no actual cession of territory . (6) nor in the case of Raj Kote, where the agreement between Government and the Native State, although in different respects dealing with the use of the land and con ferring certain powers and jurisdictions on the officers of Government, did not relate to the sovereignty of the land . (7) nor as in the ease of the Berars, where land was held under a sort of mortgage as a security for the fulfilment of certain engagements, which was held to be a tenure distinguishable from that on which the Crown held land assigned to it in perpetuity for the purpose of establishing a British station (1) The definition of the words given in the present General Clauses Act (X of 1897) is wider than that given in the former Act of 1868 The expression "British India" is now defined to mean "all territories and places within Her Majesty's dominions which are for the time being governed by Her Wajesty through the Governor General of India or through any Governor or other officer subordinate to the Governor General of Iudia" The effect of this altered definition is to widen the extent of what will be recognized as British India for the purposes of Indian legislation and to avoid the difficulties which arose from its restriction to the territories vested in Her Majesty by the Statute 21 & 22 Vict c 106 The question of the extent of British India will now, under the Codo as well as under most other Acts, depend on the fact of the place or territory being governed by His Majesty without regard to the manner in which this government was acquired, and the result being the samo whether it was acquired by cossion or otherwise, and permanently or temporarily (2) From the first and under both definitions, the words "British India" have had a wider meaning than is understood by the term when used in its merely geographical sense, as appears from the Scheduled Districts Acts, 1874, and the Laws Local Extent Act 1874, the Schedules annexed to which mention amongst other places the Laccadive and Nicobar Islands and Aden as parts of British India (3) So also British Burma is a part of British India (4)

(b) Scheduled Districts-The term is defined in Act XIV of 1874 to mean the territories mentioned in the first schedule thereto annexed and also any other territory to which the Secretary of State for India, hy resolution in Council, may declare the provisions of 33 Vict c 43 s 1, to be applicable The conclusion that a district is a non regulation district does not necessarily lead to the inference that the general Acts of Legislature are there inoperative If the Legislature has made the law in terms large enough to extend to the whole of the British territories in India it must have full effect. It must be seen in each case in what terms the law is expressed especially in respect of its territorial operation (5)

"Code"-See as to Rules seets 121-131

"Decree "-The term was first defined in the Code of 1877 to mean "the formal order of the Court in which the result of the decision of the suit or other judicial proceeding is embodied. This definition which was found defective received, after several modifications, the form in which it was enacted in 1882 The present Code omits the words "upon any right claimed or defence set up in a Civil Court. substituting the words " which conclusively determines the rights," etc. As regards cases decided under the law prior to 1882 it was observed that the law has been altered by the introduction of a more comurchensive definition of the term decree (1) and that a narrow construction should not be placed upon the language of sect 2(2) But as has been held by the Privy Council the question whether an admidication is an order or decree is to be tested not by general principles but by the expressions of the Code and those words are to be construed in their plain and obvious sense (3) Thus it has recently been held that an order assessing no value, but only reproducing the statements of the decree holder and judgment debtor.(4) and an order assessing the value according to the statement of the decree holder alone, after rejecting the judgment debtor's application for time to prove a ligher value. are not decrees, since they do not involve a judicial adjudication of value (5) There has been a coasiderable conflict of decisions on the former section notable as to the question as to the meaning of the term' right emplayed in the section, as will be seen from the following notes The chief importance of the definition will be found in the question whether in any particular case an appeal lies A decree though not according to law if not appealed against is binding (b) between the parties whether principal or pro forms (7) and their representatives who, after decree cannot open up the original proceedings (8). It creates an obligation superseding that existing before it (9) which is enforceable so long

therefore appealable as a decree (1) These decisions have now been recognised and the section expressly includes a preliminary decree

An order, however, passed in a suit for partition, subsequently to the preliminary decree, appointing a commission to make the partition, is not an order in execution, and, therefore, is not appealable under sect 244 (now sect 47) of the Code. It is an interlocutory order pending the suit which has not been finally decided, and the appellant may take objection to it in an appeal against the final decree (2).

An order directing accounts (see O XX r 16) was not appealable by the Codes of 1859 or 1877 It was only when the amending Act of 1879 was passed declaring that such an order came within the definition of a decree that it became appealable, (3) and it is still within the definition as a pre liminary decree The definition of "decree" implies that an order directing accounts is separable from the rest of the decree adjudicating on the rights claimed or the defences set up in the suit, and therefore though a provisional decree, is appealable (4) An order determining that a certain person is a partner, settling the shares of each of the partners in a business and directing an account to be taken, is a decree and is appealable, and was held to be so appealable in a preliminary stage or when appealing from the final decree (5) But where in a decree to take accounts an order was made which was a mere matter of procedure and not a question as to the rights of the parties, such as an order refusing to require the defendants to give inspection of certain books, the order was held not to be a decree or an order on a question relating to the execution of a decree (6) Morcover, the words "directing an account to be taken" were held to be used in a precise and technical sense (7) Accordingly an order declaring that the defendants were liable to pay such sum as the Government Surveyor might certify was held not to be a decree as it neither cams within these words nor was an adjudication which decided the suit (8) The substitution of the words "concluently determines" for "decides aloes not appear to effect any change in the law as above stated

'The rights of the parties—The last Code used the words "right claimed or defence set up" There can, we think, be little doubt that what the Legislature originally meant by these words to refer to, were rights of a substantive as distinguished from rights of a merely process at character. In other words, that a decree was, so far as the right elaimed, an adjudication on the merits (that is, the right to recover land, money, etc., claimed in the suit), and so far as the defence set up, an adjudication on the defence which might be grounded either on the merits, using that term in its generally accepted sense, or on some point of law affecting the merits, such as limitation. The contrary construction (1) namely, that the right might be one merely of procedure appeared to be negatived both by the general language of the section and by the circumstance that if it were correct there could not be any occasion for specifically making an order rejecting a plaint, a decree, as such an order directly myslices an adjudication against the planning right to proceed with the suit as brought by him (2).

The view here contended for his been expressly adopted or nipplied in several cases. In nn early case Wilson and Yield, JI, were disposed to hold that a decree must be an expression of opinion agon the rights of the parties, and therefore the dismissal of a sunt on a ground wholly apart from the merits of the case, such as a dismissal under sect of (now O IX r 2) for non service of summons, was not a decree (3) It has been held that a decision under sect 5 of the Court Yees Act is not a decree, and that the right obtained or defence act up must be a right or defence act up in the suit or oppeal, and not a right to have the suit or appeal herad on a particular stamp or the plaint or the memorandum of appeal rejected on account of the stamp (1). Similarly the Allahabad High Court, (5) and was formerly held by the Clientia High Court, (6) that the order of dismissal of an appeal under sect 556 (now O XLI r 17) is not a decree— It was observed by the Court in the first of the Cilentia cases eited that such an order was not "the formed expression of an adjudication upon a right elemed," that through the default the appellant had rather lost his right to obtain the adjudication of his right claimed in the proceedings or suit; that the mere right to be heard did not come within the definition of a decree It was, however, held by one of the Judges of the Bombay High Court,(1) and more recently by a Full Bench of the Calcutta High Court (2) (Prinsep, J, dissenting), that such an order is a decree on the ground as stated by the Bombay High Court that it is an adjudication adverse to the appellant's right to have his appeal heard and it decides the appeal. In the list case it was argued with, as it is submitted, considerable force that the word "right" means a substantial right arising out of the merits of the case, that the mataposition of the words " right claimed " and "defence set up" showed that the right asserted or sought to be enforced meant the right asserted or sought to be enforced in the suit or appeal. It must have some connection with the relief sought, and therefore with the merits of the case, and does not connote the processual right of a party to be heard, which is ancillary to the enforcement of the substantive right claimed in the suit or appeal itself. It was further argued that the words "defence set up" cannot mean the mere upposition by a defendant or respondent to his adversary being heard, but must mean an answer to the relief sought. There must be an adjudicition of right, and in the case of a dismissal for default the Court declines to adjudicate and does not enter into the merits of the case. These contentions were overruled by the majority of the Court (3) Previously, moreover, it had been beld by the Calcutta (4) the Allababad (5) and Madras (6) High Courts, that the analogous case of the dismissal of a suit under sect 102 (now O IX 1 8) was not a decree On the other band, it has been held that an order under sect 381 (now O XXV r 2), dismissing a suit for failure to furnish security for costs, is a decree notwithstanding that the right adjudicated upon in the order under sect 381 is the plaintiff's right to sue and not the right which he claims in the suit (7) On the other hand, an order rejecting an appeal under sect 549 (now O XLF r 10) for failure to furnish security has been held not to be a decree. claimed or defence set up. And it has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that an order for security in stay of execution is not a decree within the meaning of this section because it does not determine the rights of the parties (1) It has also been held that an order rejecting an application for permission to sne as a pauner and striking the case off the Court's file was a decree, as the matter disposed of was in fact whether the plaintiff had a right to institute the sut, and the effect of the order was to negative that right and to strike the ease off the file (2) Here again the matter has been subject of dissent, it being subsequently held that no appeal will he from an order rejecting an application for leave to appeal in forms paymers, the ground being that it was not an adjudication deciding a right claimed in a suit (3) On the other hand, an order made under sect 366 (now O XXII r 3) that a suit do abate has been held to be virtually a decree, though it is a question to be determined before the suit or appeal is heard on the merits, on the ground that it disposes of the plaintiff's claim as completely as if the suit had been dismissed (4) This decision again has been dissented from by the Allahabad High Court (5) The Allahabad High Court has in one case (6) held that an order giving leave to withdraw a suit under sect 373, or 373 and 582 (now O XXIII r 1, and sect 107). is a decree , but subsequently that Court (7) and the Bombay (8) and Calcutta (9) High Courts have held that such an order is not a decree on the ground that it does not express any adjudication on the thing claimed, but leaves all assues in the suit undetermined and relegates the parties to the position they occupied before the suit was filed Where the Appellate Court passed an order directing the ense to be sent back to the original Court, with orders to pass a formal decree in accordance with the award of an arbitrator, it was held that the order was a decree as the matter was before the Appellate Court on the merits and the order was intended to finally dispose of the matter (10) In the under-mentioned case n person claimed to appear in a suit as guardian. might have been preferred (1) In a recent case in the Bonibay High Court it was said that in applying this definition of decree it will be found that in the reported cases in that Court the rights of the parties with regard to the matter in controversy have been taken to mean general rights (such as rights in relation to status, jurisdiction, limitation and frame of suit) which if decided must have a general effect on the proceedings (2)

Where the plaintiff failed to reply to interrogatories and the Court dismissed the suit under sect 136 (now O XI r 21), it was contended that the order of dismissal was not n decree as it did not adjudicate on the merits of the right claimed. But this contention was overruled and the view adopted that when the procedure of the Court finally disposes of the suit it is a decree (3)

It was observed by Sargent, CJ, in dealing with the objection that the order did not adjudicate on the merits of the right elaimed, that having regard to the numerous authorities the other way (namely, those treating as decrees orders not dealing with the merits), it was too late to reopen the question, although had it been res integra it must be admitted that there was force in the argument based on the words of the section and also on the circumstance of there being a special provision for an order rejecting the suit, and that where the procedure of the Court finally disposes of the suit it is a decree (4)

It appears to be advisable to adopt an interpretation which affords a ready test to distinguish between decrees on the merits and merely processual orders If this is not done each case must be more or less empirically decided as and when it arises and on its peculiar circumstances In such case the general test would appear to be-"does the order finally dispose of the suit?" It may be noted in this connection that in the report of the Select Committee (March 12, 1903) on the Bill introduced in December, 1901, the Committee stated that they omitted the words restricting "decree" to adjudientions "upon the merits," as was proposed to be done because thor might be held to exclude final decisions given wholly upon questions of law But as to this it is perhaps sufficient to point out that while a claim with merits in its popular sense can be defeated by a defence based upon a point of law, such as limitation, it can only succeed by virtue of a favourable adjudication The section, however, has since been expressly amended so on the ments as to exclude any order of dismissal for default. This appears to indicate that the "rights of the parties" referred to do not include mere processual rights, and that to constitute a decree there must be an expression of opinion on the rights of the parties in the sense of an opinion upon the merits of the ease, that is on the right asserted in the suit or upon the defence whether of law or fact, set up to defend such alleged right Moreover, a dismissal for default does not "conclusively determine" the right of the party against whom it is passed and the term "decree" in this Code does not include the decree of such a Court (1). Though the words "Cod Court" have been now omitted, probably as an increasing the definition of course only applies to such Courts.

"Civil Court"—In the corresponding definition in Act A of 1877, the word "civil," which was introduced in the last Code, found no place—It has been held that a Civil Court does not include a Revenue Court in the N. W. P.

"In the sult,'—Where there is no exil suit there is no decree, and in consequence no appeal (2). No doubt there is authority for the view that the term "suit" is a very extensive one,(3) but the term ought to be confined to such proceedings as under that description are directly dealt with by the Code, or such as by the operation of the particular Acts which regulate them are treated as suits (1). The term "suit" has not been defined for the purposes of the Code (5). The conjunction of the words "suit or appeal" in the last Code appeared to show that appeals, which are often considered a stage of the suit, are not to be deemed to fall within it. The section now refers to suit only. The word is wide enough to cover every proceeding, whether original or appellate, terminable in such an adjudication (as is referred to in the first part of the clause), under this Code.

The particular orders mentioned in the second clause of the last Code as constituting a decree did so by way of addition and exception to the general definition of that term in the first clause (6). This, as has been pointed out,(7) is particularly evident from the mention of orders passed in execution proceedings under seet 211 of the last Code as they cannot be said in any sense to finally decide the suit or appeal, though an order rejecting a plaint may be said to finally determine, so far as the Court which makes the order is concerned, that the suit as brought will not lie, and may have been made a decree on that ground (8). The enumeration of orders was held to be exhaustine, and not merely illustrative or explanatory (9). Though it cannot be said that the rule was always strictly observed (tride post), analogy could not extend the term to any orders other than, though like, those specifically mentioned

(a) Execution proceedings—Under the last Code, sect 617 (now sect 11) was held to show that applications for execution were not suits, but only proceedings in a suit, and appeals from orders on applications were dealt with held (1) to be so under the Code of 1859. A settlement case under sect 104 (2) of the Bengal Tenancy Act, before it was modified by Act III of 1898, B C, was held not to be a suit (2) Proceedings contemplated by sect 27, Act VIII of 1805, Madras, are summary, and an order passed in them cannot, it was held, be said to have decided a suit or appeal and was therefore not a decree (3). An order under the Indrin Trusts Act, refusing to remove a trustee, has been held not to be a decree (4). An order appointing a person a member of a committee, under sect 10 of the Religious Endowments Act 1863, has been held by the Privy Council not to be a decree for the purposes of sect 540 (now sect 96), their Lordships observing that "there was no citil state respecting the appointment" (5). An order refusing (6) or granting (7) leave to sue under the Religious Endowments Act is not a decree nor is an order passed on a contempt of Court (8). There appears to be no change in this respect.

Rejection of a plaint—An order rejecting a plaint is a decree, what ever may be the grounds, or absence of grounds, for that order. In every case an order falling within sect 54 (now O VII r 11) is a decree (9). The words are, however, not limited to the eases provided for in sects 53 and 54 (now O VI r 17, O VII r 11), post (19). Nor does it male any difference that the rejection may be due to a misapplication of the rules of the Code or practice (11). So not only is in order rejecting a plaint on the ground that it is insufficiently stringed (12) a decree, but also an order given on the ground that the plaintiffs are minors (13). And orders which are substantially in effect orders rejecting plaints have been held to be decrees, as an order returning a plaint for including causes of action which could not be joined without leave of the Court, (14) or an order under sect 331 (now O XXI r 99) refusing to number and register a claim as a suit, which is of the same offect as a refusal to register

a plaint, or which, in other words, amounts to the rejection of a plaint (1) An order refusing to entertain a suit because the section of the law to which it related was not cited in the plant, was held under the Code of 1859 to be a underment The Court pointed out that such an order ought to state whether the suit was dismissed or the plaint rejected, and under what sections respectively (2) An order rejecting an appeal stands on the same footing. An order rejecting a plaint is a decree, and by sect 532 (now O XXXVII r 2) of the Code the provisions thereinbefore contained are made to apply to appeals, so far as such provisions are applicable. An order therefore rejecting or dismissing an appeal is a decree of the Appellate Court under the terms of the definition (3) In the Code there is no separate provision which allows the Appellate Court to "reject" a memorandum of appeal on the ground of its being barred by limitation Sect 543 (now O XLI r 3) is limited to cases in which the memorandum is not drawn in in the manner prescribed by the Code, and it is only by applying sect 54 (c) (now O VII r 11), mutatis mutandis (as provided by sect 582, now sect 107, O AXII r 11) to appeals that the Code can be understood to make provision for rejection of appeals as barred by limitation Sect 4 of the Limitation Act says that the appeal shall he dismissed. It is clear therefore that such an order of dismissal is a decree as it disposes of the appeal (4). So an order dismissing an appeal as being presented out of time.(5) rejecting an appeal as not duly presented the vakalutnamah being executed in favour of two vakils but accented only by one . able accordingly (2) The Privy Council (3) and the Courts in India (4) have held that a narrow construction is not to be placed upon the language of sect 47 (formerly sect 244) The object of that section is that the Court having the parties already before it should decide all questions relating to execution, etc arising between them in place of allowing one or the other of them to put his adversary to the delay and cost of a separate suit in cases in which but for this section it might be possible for him to do. In order to affect this object completely without injustice to the parties an order under this section has been jucluded within the definition of 'decree' so as to allow an appeal (5) It is of the utmost importance that ill objections to execution sales should be disposed of as cheaply and as speedily as possible (6) where a proceeding is sought to be set aside, that proceeding is one which relates to execution, and if the contest as to its validity is between the parties to the suit the specific ground on which the proceeding is impeached, whether it be fraud in the execution proceedings or other ground, is not material within the meaning of sect 47 (7) The expression ' relating to execution etc in sect 47, is wide and somewhat vague though perhaps necessarily so and has caused some difficulty in several cases, but once a case is held to come within these words, the lin seems plain enough (8) The matter must be deter mused by an order under sect 47 and not by separate suit and such an order is a decree and as such appealable

It was not, however, the intention of the Legislature to render all orders (irrespective of their insture) inade in relation to the execution of a decree

"Judgment"—The term has here a different signification to that it possesses in English law, in which it is used in the sense attached to the term "decree" under the Code Under the former practice it was restricted to a decision of the Common Law Courts, the term "decree" being used in the Court of Chancery This distinction is, however, now abolished, the expression "judgment" being generally used, except in matrimonial causes, in which the term "decree" is still retained (2) The judgment must be based on relevant facts duly proved before the Court, and a Judge should not therefore import into a case his own knowledge of particular facts (3) and it must be founded on a case either to be found in the pleadings or involved in or consistent with the case thereby made (4) A Judge may, however, consult other Judges before whom the trial is not held (5)

Excessive elaboration tends to impair the value of a judgment by defeating its proper object, which is to support by the most cogent reasons that suggest themselves the final conclusions at which the Judge has conscientiously arrived. The Privy Council therefore on these grounds adversely criticized a judgment of a voluminous character recording the fluctuations of the Judge's mind from day to day in the course of an exceptionally long trial, and the officet (often temporary upon him) of a particular piece of evidence or argument of counsel since from such a mass of often conflicting statements it is not easy for a Court of Appeal to extract the precise grounds on which the final conclusion rests (6). Moreover it is a substantial objection to a judgment that it does not dispose of the question as it was presented by the parties, e.g., whereit finds a particular signature to be a forgery which both sides admit to be genuine (7). For the provisions of the Code as to judgments, see sect 33 and 0. XX., post and Judge, sub too.

¹² B 36 (1887), dissenting from the last munitioned case, and distinguishing between a judicial and administrative inquiry, the definition in the Exidence Act is framed only for the purposes of the Act itself, and should not 1 extended by and its legitimate scope. ment" is used in the Letters Pitent of the High Courts, clauses 39 and 40. speaking respectively of appeals to the Privy Council from "any final judgment, decree or order." and from "any welminary or interlocutary audament, decree or order" (1) Clause 15 (and clause 10 of the Allahabad Letters Patent) speak of a "judgment" (without any such qualification) providing that an appeal to the High Court shall be from the judgment (not being a sentence or order passed or made in any criminal trail of one Judge of the said High Court (2) The meaning of this term in this clause has been the subject matter of dis cussion in numerous cases. It is well settled that the term is not limited to the final judgment in the suit. (3) nor, indeed, to a judgment in a suit at all (4) In. however, the first of the cases last cited, a very wide meaning was given to the term, which was held to mean any decision or determination affecting the rights or the interest of any suitor or applicant, it being said to be impossible to prescribe any limits to the right of appeal founded upon the nature of the order or decree appealed from though, assuming that a party had the right to be heard in overs case, it was obvious that the duty of the Appellate Court might vary considerably according to the nature of the order or decree complained of, and that the Appellate Court would rightly decline to interfere where the lower Court had been given a discretion (5) This view has, however, been considered to be too broad (6) and the definition commonly accented is that of Couch, C.J. (7) which has become classical (8) having been approved in numerous cases (9)

Touch the marginal area to clause 15 would make it appear that the section was intended to apply only to judgments of Course of original judicious, yet these areas form an year of the original and it has been held that the words of the clause are sufficiently comprehensive to include judgment passed in the exercise of jurisdiction either original (0 or appellars. And therefore an appeal has under this clause from the judgment of a Divisional Cours in the exercise of its appellare jurisdiction when the Judge of the Cours are equally decided in opinion; but under clause 55 the down of the senior Judge prevails (4). Clause 55 (or clause 55 to the Allahriad Levers Parent) was superseded by sect. 575 of the last Code. (5) but the latter section did not take away the right of appeal given by clause 15 and if the Judges differ, but did not refer under sect. 575, there was an appeal under the Levers Parent (6)

There is an appeal from the decision of one of the Judges exercising Admiralty or Vice admiralty jurisdiction (2).

It often happens that Judges composing Divisional Benches, although they concur in the mode of deciding the appeal, either disagree as to some of the crasons or assign different reasons for their judgments. But in order that there be an appeal the difference of opinion must be as to the final and complete decision of the case and not a difference of opinion upon one or more of the points arising in it (3). Points not rused before a Divisional Bench cannot be rused on appeal (4). As to huntation, see below (6)

It is only the pleader

Where, however, the Court has jurisdiction over the subject neutrer and over the person and a defendant has some privile, which exempts him from the objection, such privilege may, it has been said, be waived (1). And there are numerous authorities which establish that when, in a cause which the Judge is competent to try, the parties, without objection, join issue and go to trial upon the merits, the defendant cannot subsequently dispute his jurisdiction upon the grounds that there are irregularities in the initial procedure which, if objected to at the time, would have led to the dispusses of the suit (3).

n suit necessarily identical with the property to which the suit relates. The subject matter of a suit is generally the specific thing sought in it for damages for injuring a carriage the subject matter would in one sense be the carriage, but the object of the suit would be the amount demanded. Where there is no material property concerned, as in a suit for slander, the subject matter cannot be identified with a tangible thing. Where on the other hand the claim is for a particular field, that field as a material object is sought and is regarded as the subject matter of the suit. These meanings of the term are not inconsistent. They are reconciled by saying that the field is the subjectmatter in so far as it is conceived as embraced in the command or adjudication sought. Hence what is sought is the true measure of the subject-matter, not what the suit is about in a wider and vaguer sense (1) It has been recently held by a Pull Bench of the Bembay High Court, that where the main purpose of n suit was to determine a right to immoveable property, a Small Cause Court had nevertheless jurisdiction to entertain it if the relief asked was not for immeveable property, but fer payment of a sum of money (2)

In every suit the plaintiff advances two matters for determination whether ground exists for reserting to the Court for aid, and if it does, the relief claimed as due Neither of these uniters alone is the subject-matter of the suit, to the exclusion of the other, since each alike is matter necessary to be determined in the suit before a decree can be granted to the plaintiff (3) Nor can the nature of the defendant's plea affect the jurisdiction acquired by a Court over the plaintiff s claim (4) Even an equitable claim of set off, to which O VIII r 6, nost, does not apply, will not be taken cognizance of by a Court if it is in excess of its pecuniary jurisdiction, though that circumstance will not affect the jurisdiction of the Court over the suit itself (5) Jurisdiction over the subject-matter must exist throughout the preceedings in the suit Jurisdiction must exist at the time of its institution as well as at that of its disposal (6) The decision in Shamrav & Nilon (7) is not against this view, as the decision is grounded on the encumstance that surisdiction in proceedings taken for the execution of a decree is by law not made to depend on the amount in respect of which the execution is taken, but on the amount claimed in the suit in which the decree was given (8)

as well as a local original jurisdiction embracing matters civil as well as criminal. It executed its own writs and processes throughout the provinces and districts annexed to and made subject to the Presidency of Fort William, such provinces and districts being within the limits of its general juris diction.

The jurisdiction of the High Court is, in some respects, analogous to that of the Supreme Court, but is, in other respects, wholly dissimilar It has an Appellate Jurisdiction, as extensive as that possessed by the late Sudder Court, which it never exercises for the purpose of enforcing its decrees or orders the same being enforced through the subordinate Courts and it has an Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, and also an Extraordinary Original Criminal Junisdiction, peculiar to itself It has, besides, a Civil Jurisdiction, 2 Criminal Jurisdiction, an Admiralty and Vice admiralty Jurisdiction a Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction and a Matrimonial Jurisdiction Sects 11 and 12 of the Letters Patent, constituting the High Court, relate to its Original Civil Jurisdiction, sect 13 to its Extraordinary Original Civil Turisdiction, sects 21 and 22 to its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction, sect 23 to its Extraordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction, sects 31 and 32 to its Admiralty and Vice admiralty Jinisdiction, sects 33 and 34 to its Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction, sect 35 to its Matrimonial Juris diction, and sects 24, 15, and 16 to its Appellate Jurisdiction Its Ordinary Civil Jurisdiction unlike the Jurisdiction of the Supreme Court, is merely local, as 15 also its Matrimonial Jurisdiction Its Extraordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction is to try and determine any suit being or falling within the jurisdiction of any Court, whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, subject to its superintendence, when it shall think proper to do so, either on the agreement of the parties to that effect, or for the purposes of justice Its Ordinary Original Criminal Jurisdiction is both local and general, and is in all respects the same as that evercised by the Supreme Court on its Crown side Its Extraordinary Original Criminal June diction is over all persons residing in places within the jurisdiction of any Court, formerly subject to the superintendence of the Sudder Nizamut Adamlut at Calcutta, whether within or without the Bengal Division of the Presidency of Fort William, and, in the exercise of this jurisdiction, it has authority to try, at its discretion any such persons brought before it on charges preferred by the Advocate General or by any Magistrate, or other officer, specially appointed by the Government in that behalf Its Admiralty and Vice admiralty Jurisdiction is the same as that exercised by the Supreme Court on its Admiralty side, and by the late Vice admiralty Court Its Testamentary and Intestate Jurisdiction is the same as that exercised by the Supreme Court on its Ecclesiastical side As regards the Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Court, sect 2 of the Letters Patent provides that "the High Court of Judicature at Fort William in Bengal shall have, and evereise Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction, within such local limits as may, from time to time, be declared and prescribed by any law or regulation made by the Governor General in Council, and, until some local limits shall be so declared, and prescribed within the limits declared and prescribed by the Proclamation fixing the limits of Calcutta issued by the Governor General in Conneil on the 10th day of Sentember, 1791 and the Ordinary O ignal Civil Jurisdiction of the said High Court shall not extend beyond the limits for the time being deelared and prescribed as the local limits of such jurisdiction. As no law or regulation has been made by the Governor General in Council declaring and prescribing local limits within which the Ordinary Original Civil Jurisdiction of the Court is to be exercised the limits of the town of Calcutta are the present limits within which jurisdiction is to be exercised (1)

Certain Courts are of hmited but exclusive jurisdiction such as the Presidency and Provincial (Act IX of 1887) Small Cause Courts which have limited jurisdiction of an exclusive character over certain classes of suits for money or moveable property which may be tried summarily and which on that ground are excluded from the purisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts There are however numerous rulings to the effect that the nature of a suit is not changed because a question of title is incidentally raised in it (2) As to other Courts of exclusive jurisdiction see post "Fither expressly or implied! barred As regards the valuation of the subject matter as giving jurisdiction sec 'Pecuniar Lurisdiction post

Just as sect 9 of the last Code coacted that no person should be exempted from the jurisdiction, so as records subject matter sect. 10 cureted that subject to the provisions of the Code and other enactments to which reference will be made no envil cause is exempted from the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts (tid post) Generally speaking with the exception of Small Cause Courts (3) and Revenue Courts (4) the purisdiction (subject to the conditions mentioned in sect 10) as regards the subject matter is not limited though the power to take cognizance of a particular suit may be affected by its value. So though a Munsif in Bengal may try all suits cognizable by Civil Courts le eau only do so in the case of suits the value of which usually does not exceed 1000 runers

The limits of these areas determine the local limits of the Courts' jurisdiction for the trial of original suits and appeals Personal jurisdiction depends on the place of residence or business of the defendant. The former for transitory actions, that is, actions which are brought on occurrences which happen any where, depends on whether the cause of action or part of the cause of action arose within the local limits of the jurisdiction, and for local actions or actions relating to immoveable property or for the recovery of moveable property actually under distraint or attachment, depends on the situation of the property within the local jurisdiction The case of moveable property attached or under distruit is an exception to the general rule that personal property has no locality, by which it is not meant that it has no visible locality, but that it follows the person and is governed by the law which governs him (1) The exception in the Code (2) is probably founded on the fact that in the case given the situs of the moveable property is fixed and cannot be altered by any person at his pleasure, and, perhaps, also for the convenience of judicial administration The limits of these different areas determine the local limits of the Courts' jurisdiction for the trial of suits and appeals. The difficulty exists in what has been fitly described as the localization of suits and rules have therefore been enacted by the Legislature for determining the circum stances in which a suit may be taken cognizance of by the Courts having jurisdiction in any particular area

Chuse 12 of the Letters Patent determine the ordinary original juris diction of the Presidency High Courts, the High Court at Allahabad having ne ordinary original civil jurisdiction (3) There has however been consider able conflict of opinion as to the several essentials of jurisdiction for which provision has been made by these Charters, (4) chiefly as to the nature of "suits for land" To avoid such differences of opinion in the Provincial Courts, the Code, in seets 16-20, post, makes detailed provisions as regards jurisdiction, and in any case governed by those sections there can hardly be any difference as to the character of the local suits to which the principle of territorial juris diction must be held to apply These provisions as also those contained in the Charters are dealt with in the Notes to those sections

It has been held that a Court has no jurisdiction to hear and decide a suit or appeal within its jurisdiction and cognizable by it, if it is instituted in a Court not having such jurisdiction, (5) even though it may be transferred to it by higher judicial anthorny Tho Calcutta Court has held (6) that it could direct the trunsfer of an appeal only from a Court having jurisdiction to receive and try it, and that decision was approved of by the Judicial Committee (1)

As to the jurisdiction over proceedings in execution of a decree see sect

An appeal cannot be heard upon the ments unless the decree from which the appeal was preferred was passed by a Judge having jurisdiction over the matter in dispute. The Appellate Court is only a Court of Frora, and the trial by an Appellate Court cannot be accepted in place of a trial by the Court of first instance (2) But though the Appellate Court cannot entertain the appeal on the ments where a Subordinate Court has no jurisdiction over the trial of a suit or appeal the Appellate Court authorized to hear appeals from that Subordinate Court has power as such to set assign the proceedings on an appeal (3) So where a defendant appealed from the Deputy Collector to the District Judge and the plaintiff then appealed to the High Court, upon an objection to the hearing of the appeal on the ground that as no appeal (3) to the District Judge afforders no appeal lay to the High Court, the objection was overruled and the High Court reversed the decree of the District Judge and restored that of the first Court (1). As to the effect of absence of objection to jurisdiction see sect 21 nost.

(b) Personal jurisdiction—As already stated jurisdiction is conferred by the various Charters and Letters Patent and Acts of the Legislature to which recourse must be had, to determine the extent of jurisdiction in the case of any particular suit and Court. And such jurisdiction may be considered with reference to the (a) parties (b) subject matter (c) local and (d) necuminary limits.

In the first place this section and sect 10 of the last Code enact general

rules which are applicable to all Civil Courts

Their effect may be generally, though succinetly expressed in the language of Garth, CJ, in a case in which the defendant was master of an Italian vessel (5) "There is no doubt whatever that by the law of this country which is the same in that respect as the law of England Civil Courts as a general rule have juris diction to try all civil with against all persons of any nationality within the local limits of their jurisdiction."

Sect 10 of the last Code dealt with jurisdiction over persons Prior to 1850 Courts presided over by native officers were not competent to tall 0 cognizance of suits to which Europeans or Americans were parties The Code of 1859 enceted the same rule as that contained in sect 10 of the last Code The provisions contained in that section were first enacted by Act XI of 1836 and were reproduced in the Code of 1859, and in subsequent Codes Then retention has been considered no longer necessary, the principle of law which it embodied having been sufficiently established

The repeal of sect 151 of the Army Act by 51 & 52 Vict c 4, s 6, has removed the limitation on the general jurisdiction of Civil Courts in regard to suits for deht against officers holding the King's Commission (1) There are particular enactments (2) exempting from the ordinary jurisdiction particular persons or classes of persons, and sect 86, post, contains special provisions relating to princes, chiefs, ambassadors and envoys. There was nothing, however, in sect 10 which affected such personal exemptions, as they were not on the ground of descent or place of birth, but by virtue of special enactments

The exemption of independent foreign Sovereigns from the jurisdiction of all Civil Courts is, as a general rule, universally admitted (3) As to the con ditions in which protected independent native princes may be sued, see sect 86, post "It is an attribute of sovereignty and an universal law that a State cannot be sued in its own Courts without its consent" (4) A Sovereign State may, however, bring and maintain a suit as any other suitor. As to suits by foreign States see seets 84, 87, post In India, however, the Government, unlike the Crown, can be and is often sued. And this is so on account of the original trading character of the East India Company, who in course of time acquired the Government of India, and from whom the late Queen took over the Government The statute 21 & 22 Vict c 106, which transferred to the Crown the possession and government of the British territories in India, expressly provided for a continuance of both the nature and the extent of liabilities with which the revenues of India in the Company s hands were chargeable As the Crown could, however, not be sued as the East India Company could have been, in her own Courts, it was enacted by sect 65 that the Secretary of State in Council should and might sue and be sued as a Body Corporate and that all persons might have the same remedies against the Secretary of State as they could have done against the Fast India

Company, and that the property and effects thereby yested in the Crown for the nurnoses of the Government of India, or acquired for the said nurnoses. should be subject and hable to the same judgments and executions as they would, while vested in the Company, have been liable to in respect of debts and habilities lawfully contracted and mentred by the Company It may therefore he generally said that the hability of the Secretary of State to be sued depends on that of the East India Company, and the hability alleged must be one incurred on account of the Government of India (1) But as the latter could not be, therefore the Secretary of State cannot be, sued for all its acts. The Company, though established originally for purposes of trade. acquired in time sovereign powers (2) Therefore acts done in the execution of these sovereign powers were not subject to the control of the Municipal Courts (3) Though the principle is well established, there is some conflict of opinion as to what acts ere to he deemed acts of State, and therefore beyond the cognizance of the Civil Courts (4) The meaning of an "act of State" has been defined by the Privy Council to be "something which eppertains to the functions of Government " (5)

Several Indian Acts exempt from the jurisdiction of Civil Courts various acts of executive and revenue officers dono in discharge of the work of administration. the suit, whether then presence is temporary or permanent. As regards non resident foreigners, Plouden, J, in Bikrama Singh v Bir Singh (1) said "There is certainly, so far as I can ascertain, no rule of international juris prudence universally recognized that a Muniemal Court is absolutely incompetent to exercise jurisdiction over a non resident foreigner, and it is certain that in many, if not in most, countries the Municipal law authorizes the exercise of jurisdiction in such cases by its own Courts subject, generally speaking, to the condition that notice, actual or constructive, be given to the absent defendant For instance, the Code of Civil Procedure (sect 10 of the last Code) enacted that no person should, by reason of his descent or place of birth be in any civil proceeding, exempt from the jurisdiction of any of the Courts, and in sect 89 (now O V r 25) the Code provides for service of summons out of the jurisdiction while sect 17 (now sect 20) authorizes the Court to take cognizance of certain cuts when the cause of action has arisen within the junisdiction' It appears however, to be generally agreed upon that even the personal service of a summons on a non resident foreigner at his foreign domicile can create no jurisdiction so as to render the judgment enforceable in the Courts of any other State (2) masmuch as no Sovereignty can extend its powers beyond its own territorial limits to subject either persons or proporty to its judicial decision. And there is no principle for holding that the mero possession of property in the foreign country would by leason of the protection enjoyed, confer on the Courts of that country jurisdiction over a foreigner neither domiciled nor resident therein in respect of matters un connected with the property (3) Whilst every tribunal may execute process against property within its jurisdiction, existence of such property affords no sufficient ground for imposing on the foreign owner of that property a duty or obligation to fulfil the judgment (4) See, further, as to personal jurisdiction and 1esidence, eccts 19 and 20, post and notes thereon

No sort of jurisdiction can be obtained against one who was dead when the suit was commenced against him as a defendant or in his name as plaintiff, and a judgment for or against him must necessarily be void (5) If a suit is once validly commenced in any Court, jurisdiction is not taken away by the change of residence or country by the defendant, and the weight of authority is in favour of the view that jurisdiction is not divested by death of either party after the institution of the suit and a judgment rendered after a party s death, though erroneous, is voidable and not void (6)

(c) Pecuniary jurisdiction—Throughout the country there are Courts of different grades having jurisdiction in study of different amounts in certain prescribed local areas. In determining therefore, whether any Court has jurisdiction over any particular suit, regard must be had not only to the nature of the suit but also to the pecuniary extent of the Courts jurisdiction which are to be found in the various Acts under which the Courts are constituted.

The only limit upon the original jurisdiction of the Presidency High Courts is the exclusion of cases falling within the jurisdiction of the Presidency Small Cau e Courts in which the debt or durings or value of the property sued for dece not exceed 100 times.

In the case of the Courts governed by the Bengal N W P and Assam Civil Courts Act (VII of 1887) the jurisdiction of a District Judge of Subordinate Judge extends subject to the provisions of sect 15 of the Code (which provisions have been held not to affect jurisdiction but to be matter of procedure only (2)) to all original suits for the time being cognizable by Civil Courts. The jurisdiction of a Munist inless extended by notification, is limited to like suits the value of which does not exceed 1000 rupess (3). The Bombay Civil Courts. Act (AIV of 1869) provides for District. Joint Assistant and Subordinate Judges, the latter of whom are of two classes. The jurisdiction of the first class extends to all suits, and of the second to suits and proceedings of which the subject matter does not exceed in amount or value 5000 rupees (4).

The Oudh Civil Courts are governed by Act AIII of 1879 There are four grades of Courts The Judicial Commissioner and District Judge who have appellate jurisdiction and the latter original jurisdiction also and Subordinate Judges and Munsifs whose jurisdiction subject to notification is 10 000

rupces and 1000 rupces respectively (5)

Every suit must be instituted in the Court of the lowest grade competer to try it (6). What prome faces determines the purediction is the claim as subject matter of the claim as estimated by the plaintiff and this determination baving given the jurisdiction the jurisdiction itself continues whatever the event of the suit unless a different principle comes into operation to prevent such a result or to make the proceedings from the first abortive (7).

The subject-matter and value of a suit is determined by the plaintiff's statement of demand Jurisduction is not affected by the defendant's plen, it tiffs demand and not by the defendant's answer, which only impugns the existence of the demand but does not alter or affect its nature (1) It is the claim therefore and not the defence which is to be looked at for the purpose of determining jurisduction (2)

As regards the mode of valuation, the value need not on general principles be always the same as that for the purpose of levy of court lees Formerly questions frequently arose as to the distinction between the valuation of a suit for the purposes of stamp duty and the valuation of the subject matter of the suit for the purpose of determining the jurisdiction of the Court (3) Since, however, the passing of the Suits Valuation Act of 1887 these questions do not generally arise, for that Act (4) provides that where in suits other than those referred to in the Court Fees Act 1870 s 7, sub s v, vi, in, x, cl (d), court fees are payable ad valurem under the Court Fees Act, 1870, the value as determinable for the computation of court-fees and the value for purposes of jurisdiction shall be the same. chief reason why the amount which is proved and claimed in a suit does not determine or affect the jurisdiction over it is that the Court has to consider and inquire in the suit, not only as to that amount, but as to the total amount asked for in the plaint, and discussed in the proceedings, the claim for the portion dismissed being adjudicated upon not less than that for the portion decreed. Nor is the other course practicable, as the amount proved cannot be known at the commencement of the snit, and jurisdiction must be fixed before proceedings are commenced and evidence entered upon (1). The pecuniary jurisdiction of a Civil Court on its original or appellate side is ordinarily speaking governed by the value stated by the plaintiff in his plaint, but if a suit having regard to the valuation in the plaint is within the jurisdiction it is not ousted by the Court finding that a decree for a sum exceeding the limits of its pecuniary jurisdiction should be given to the plaintiff (2)

It is a well known principle that the merits of a demand are immaterial as affecting jurisdiction. It is a mistaken conception that jurisdiction depends on facts or the actual existence of matters or things instead of upon the allegations concerning them (3). The question of jurisdiction does not depend upon the truth or falsehood of the claim, but upon its nature, it is determinable at the commencement, not at the conclusion, of the inquiry (4). It has, however, been held in this country that a plaintiff cannot give jurisdiction to or take away jurisdiction from a Court by adding to his claim something to which he was not entitled upon any view of the case, and such unwarrantable addition to his claim must be struck out and the jurisdiction of the Court determined with reference to the rest of his claim (5)

But the cases referred to in the first of the last mentioned decisions appear, it has been pointed out, (6) to proceed upon a misconception of the nature of jurisdiction as stated above, unless they may be justified on the ground that an "exaggerated claim thus hrought for the purpose of getting a trial in a different Court is substantially a fraud upon the law, and must be rejected, whether it arises from more recklessness or from an artful design to get the adjudication of one Judge instead of that of another, "(1) in principle which may apply when the intention of evading the competency of jurisdiction is certain (2). In practice, however, the establishment of fraud, which should not be presumed, involves considerable difficulties. To every case in which the demand is evidently evaggerated there will be many which will be really doubtful and where the Judge might act according to his own peculiar views in declaring biniself incompetent to take cognizance of a demand beyond the necumary limits of his jurisdiction, as he findly those pressure (3).

The general effect, however, of the Souts Valuation Act is as already stated, to avoid an independent inquiry to determine the jurisdiction of Courts. and this question, in respect of simple overvaluation as distinguished from other additions to the claim.(4) is not so likely to arise as formerly. And in the case of appeals the matter is now regulated by seet. 11 of the Suits Valuation Act Since the passing of that Act it has been held that while it is no doubt a sound rule that Courts should not allow parties to evade the law relating to matters of jurisdiction and that where it is found that a party has intentionally exaggerated his claim in order to bring his suit in a Court which otherwise would not have jurisdiction to try it, before the merits of the claim have been gone into the plaint should be returned to be presented to the proper Court, yet this rule must be taken with qualifications and one important quabfication is that embodied in sect 11 of the Suits Valuation Act, namely that where the suit has been tried on its merits by the first Court, and the overvaluation of the suit is not found to have prejudicially affected the disposal of the suit on the ments, there the objection as to juris diction should not be given effect to A plaintiff who alters the valuation of his suit for the purpose of evading jurisdiction may be punished by having no costs allowed to him. but it does not conduce to promote the ends of justice if an Appellate Court were to set aside a decision which is found to be correct on the merits simply because the value of the suit had been designedly increased or diminished to evade jurisdiction (5)

question of essential jurisdiction throughout the suit. The jurisdiction in appeals and execution is determined primarily by the amount or value of the subject-matter of the original suit Appeals from decrees of original Courts when allowed, he "to the Courts authorized to hear appeals" from these Courts (1) Appeals from orders he to the Court to which an appeal hes from a decree (2) In the case of appeals to the Privy Council, the value of the subject matter must be Rs 10,000 and upwards, and the amount or value of the matter in dispute on appeal must not be less than that amount (3) But in the case of all other appeals the valuation of the dispute on appeal is not considered even in determining whether an appeal is to he It was formerly contended that the appeal should be held to be to the Court having jurisdiction over the amount in dispute in the appeal but it is now settled that the value of the original suit, and not of the matter in dispute in the appeal, is the criterion by which to determine appellate jurisdiction. It is thus the money value of the original suits that fixes the jurisdiction of the Courts throughout the subse quent litigation in its several stages, and not the value of what has been left in dispute (4) Not only does the jurisdiction continue throughout the suit but whatever may be the result of the suit in all such proceedings also such as execution, as by the Code are brought within its cognizance as incidental to the suit Jurisdiction is not lost in execution because the interest accrued after decree has raised the amount due above the money limit (5) See generally as to execution sect 38, vost

or to an office, are not suits of a civil nature.(1) and as such co-mizable by the Courts, which have also in some cases refused to interfere in matters of a purely social nature. Rights of a civil nature mean such rights as are vested in the citizen and fall within the domain of private and not of public law (2) These rights relate both to property and to the person, and suits may be for the recovery of possession, or damages, or for specific rehef. Wherever a right is recognized by law, a suit will lie to enforce it unless it is barred by any enactment on the principle ubs sus ibs remedium. What are such rights is the subject matter of substantive law and not of procedure, and therefore need not be discussed here (3) The question whether a suit is of a civil nature is not necessarily the same as that whether it is cognizable, as the cognizability depends not only on the nature of the suit, but on the recognition by positive law of the existence of the rights stated and of the right to the redress sought So suits for enforcement of rights relating to caste are suits of a civil nature though they are not always cognizable by the Courts is such In the Bengal Presidency, suits for restoration to easte were made expressly so cognizable by Bengal Reg III of 1793 and have been often taken cognizance of by the Courts Whilst, on the other hand Bombay Reg If of 1827, in giving Civil Courts a cognizance 'generally of all suits and complaints of a civil nature," expressly provided that "no interference on the part of the Court in easte questions is hereby warranted beyond the admission and trial of any suit instituted for the recovery of damages on account of an alleged injury to the easte and character of the plaintiff. arising from some illegal act or unjustifiable conduct of the other party "(4)

Again, a suit for violation of a right of privacy is not generally allowed because the suit is not iccognized by the general law of India and not because such a suit is not of a civil nature a suit of that character being allowed in Guijarat and various districts of the N W P, where the right is recognized under local custom. In addition to suits relating to caste, reference my be made to certain others in regard to which questions have arisen from time to time. Suits relating to marriage have long been held cognizable by Civil Courts having been made expressly so in the Bengel Presidency by Bengel Reg. III of 1793—such as suits to declare the validity or invalidity or jactifation of marriage, for damages for breach of, though not for specific performance of, marriage, and restitution of conjugal rights.

As already stated, and as appears from the section, suits merely relating to religious rights and ceremones will not be entertained unless they involve a right to property or to an office. The latter may be either of a personal character, such as that of a family priest, or may be a local office. Personal offices are gradually tosing their legal character as such, and the law now appears generally to recognize only local offices—that is offices connected with a certain temple, ghat, or locality which are essentially distinct from personal offices (1)

"Either expressly or impliedly barred "—The words in the former Code, "barred by any enactment for the time being in force" were held to mean expressly barred, and therefore the giving of a concurrent remedy did not but a suit (2). As to whether the matter would now fall within the implied bar, vide post. Enactments affecting the jurisdiction of Courts will be construed so far as possible to avoid the effect of transferring the determination of rights and liabilities from the ordinary Courts to executive officers (3). The jurisdiction of a Civil Court is not excluded unless the cognizance of the entire suit as brought is barred (4). The most important restrictions on the jurisdiction of the ordinary Civil Courts over civil suits are enceted by the Acts relating to the revenue or the rent of the agricultural or other lands assessed with the Government demand. The provisions of these Acts are different for different provinces but they all appear to be based on the principle that matters likely to affect the liability for, or the amount of, the Government Land Revenue.

It has however, been recently held by the Bombay High Court that seet 4 (c) of the last named Act is not a har to a suit in which there is a claim arising out of the olleged illegality of proceedings taken for the realization of land revenue (6)

In the Vidras Presidency (7) and in Lower Bengal, the jurisdiction of the Civil Courts in rent and tenancy cases has not, os a general rule been excluded By Act VIII (B C) of 1869 Revenue Courts were abolished over the greater part of Bengal and the trial of rent suits was made over to the ordinary Civil Courts (8) The bar is in some cases due to administrative requirements and practical convenience Thus the Municipal Acts of some of the provinces contain special provisions barring the cognizance of suits by Civil Courts chiefly in matters relating to taxation (9)

Somewhat on a similar principle sect 133 of the Criminal Procedure Codo provides that no order made by a Magistrate under that section "shall be called in question in any Civil Court, 'though this provision has been held not to bar a suit for a declaration of a person's exclusive right to any land which the Magis trate may have declared or assumed to be public highway (10) And it has been held that under this section the fact that a criminal trial has not resulted in a conviction is no bar to a civil suit against the accused (11). gainst civil junisdiction is merely of a provisional character, as in the case of the Pensions Act of 1871 (I) The Civil Courts are bound to respect an order passed by a Magistrate when he is acting within his jurisdiction, (2) but a suit has been held to be declaring that the order of a Magistrate passed under sect 518, Act X. of 1872, was without jurisdiction, and giving rehef by declaring the plaintiff's right (3) As also one for maintenance of a child notwithstanding the order of a magistrate refusing maintenance (4).

A judgment and decree vitiated by fraud or collusion is a nullity, and a suit will be to set it aside (5). There is no enactment harring the Court's jurisdiction to entertain a suit to set aside, on the ground of fraud, a decree passed by another Court of concurrent jurisdiction (6). While the question whether a decree sought to be executed was obtained by fraud is not within the scope of sect. 47, post, and can only be raised by a separate suit, if, however the decree is not imperched for fraud, but only the execution proceedings thereunder, the question must be rused in those proceedings, and not by separate suit (7). A grant of probate is not in the nature of a summary proceeding to be contested by a regular suit in the Civil Court. The grant must be contested by an application to revoke in the Court of Probate (8). The grant of probate is the decree of a Court which no other Court can set uside except for fraud or want of jurisdiction (9).

The former se tion dealt only with har by special enactment, but there are other cases in which a suit is not allowed to lie, on general principles of liw The amended section includes an implied but In some cases a suit is not allowed as there is no substantive right giving rise to a cause of action by reason of the non recognition of the right, on account of some rule of statutory or common law or of some principle of public policy or morality So a special procedure having been provided in the Criminal Procedure Code in regard to public roads, a suit will not be for obstructing a public road unless the plaintiff has suffered special damage. onforcing it, that method and not the remedy at Common Law must be followed Where, however, a statute is confirmatory of a pre existing right, the new remedy is presumed as cumulative or alternative unless an Intention to the contrary appears from some other part of the statute (1) The Madras High Court has recognized that principle in disallowing suits brought to enforce registration otherwise than in accordance with the provisions of sect 77 of the Indian Registration Act The Calcutta, Madras. and Allahabad High Courts hold that a suit will not lie to compel the registration of a document after a refusal by the sub registrar to register the same except in accordance with these provisions (2) Again, when by an Act of the Legislature powers are given to any person, for a public purpose, from which an individual may receive an injury if the mode of redressing the injury is pointed out by the Act, the jurisdiction of the ordinary Courts is ousted, and in case of injury the party cannot proceed by ordinary action (3) So, the Code providing a special method of paying the necessary expenses of a witness, the latter connot suo for them (4) Every Court is competent to ward costs in any proceedings, and a separate suit will therefore not lie for their recovery (5)

No har to a suit will be implied, however, from the provision of a summary and special remedy in a special Act for a right existing under common law. Thus a suit for compensation for wrongful seizure of eattle will lie in a Civil Court, the provisions of Act I of 1871 being no but to it (6). him for the recovery of the same,(1) the two remedies being concurrent. And notwithstanding the procedure under sect 152, O XX r 6, sect 114, O XLVII 1 1, post, may be available, there is nothing to prevent a suit to rectify a mistake in a decree (2)

Generally, where a decree holder can proceed under the execution sections he cannot hring a regular suit. So where, having obtained a decree for money, A sued to recover the unsatisfied balance thereof from B, alleging that the property of the deceased judgment debtor was in his possession it was held that he should have enforced his decree by execution and sale or hy execution and attachment and appointment of a receiver, and no regular suit would lie (3) A suit does not lie for damages for non compliance with a mandatory injunction to compel the performance of which the plaintiff had his remedy in execution (4) Nor will a suit he for the costs of a receiver which were deducted in execution of a decree for mesne profits from the amount of such mesne profits, masmuch as the objection to such deduction should have been urged in the execution proceedings (5) So, in the case of an ordinary action in ejectment in which a plaintiff gets a decree for possession of the property, if he takes no stops to execute that decree within the time allowed by law, he cannot by a fresh suit, based either on the decree or on his title as it stood at the time that the first suit was brought, evade the law of limitation (6) A person suing on his proprietary title to recover pessession of mortgaged property on the ground that the mertgage had been satisfied, and obtaining in unconditional decree for possession, is in the same position (7) The principle is that once any right has been enforced by a suit in which a decree has been obtained, the decree becomes the embediment of that right, and that right in its inchoato state is merged in this decree (8) the enforcement of which, if not barred by limitation must be by proceedings taken to execute it. As regards suits for redemption, considerable conflict exists In some cases the existence of a prior decree for redemption unexecuted has been held to har a subsequent decree for the same relief. The question has been variously viewed from the standpoint of the general principles referred to and the applicability of sect 11 (formerly sect 13) and sect 47 (formerly seet 214) of the Code It appears to be agreed that in some cases sect 13 would have barred the subsequent suit A Full Bench of the

Allahabad High Court has held that the nature of redemption decrees makes sect 244 (now 47) mapplicable, and that the operation of the rule of res audicata depends upon the nature of the decree made in the previous stuts in each instance Where a Court has onea adjudicated upon a mortgagor's right to redeem, so many of the issues as bore upon that, and are heard and determined, become res judicata and cannot he re onened, but unless there has been a determination that the mortgager has no right to redeem, there would still remain one other issue in a subsequent suit, which would not be res sudicate Until a mortgagee has applied for an order of sale under sect 93 of the Transfer of Property Act (see now O XXXIV r 8), the plaintiff s right to redeem exists and can be at any time enforced. If therefore a mortgagoi has obtained a decree for redemption, which does not contain a provision foreclosing the right of redemption an default, and has not enforced that decree and has not paid in the decretal amount within time he can subse quently bring a second suit for redemption of the mortgage in respect of which such first decree was obtained (1) On the other hand a Tull Bench af the Madras High Court has held that where a suit for redemption has been instituted and a decree for redemption has been passed therein but not executed a subsequent suit is not maintainable for the redemption of the same martgage The courty of redemption no doubt remains unforeclosed and the rolation of mortgagor and mortgagee continues until an order absolute under sect 93 (see now O XXXIV r 8) is made, and having regard to the cantinuance of the relation of marteneor and mortgagee, earlier decisions of the same High Caurt held that as such jural relation had not been put an ond to a second sut would be The Full Bench, however held that though the right might exist, the remedy was barred by sect 11 (formerly sect 13) of the Code A decree for redemption passed under sect 92 of the Transfer of Praperty Act (see now O XXIV r 7) is a final judgment within the mein ing of sect 11, post, but if the order absolute for foreclosure or sale under sect 93 is the final judgment, and the decrea under sect 92 (see now O XAMV r 7) is interlocutary then if na arder is presed under sect 93, the suit is pending and sect 10 (formerly sect 12) post burs a second trial The fact, therefore, that no order absolute has been made under sect 93 (see now O XXXIV r 8), extinguishing the right to redeem, will not allow of a second suit being brought, though it will entitle the mortgagor to exercise his right of redemption under the decree if he be not burred by himitation hy obtaining a postponement of the day fixed for payment (2) The Bombay High Court has held that a decree for redemption, on the default of the decree holder to pay the money declared to be due within the time fixed by the decree, or, if none he fixed, within the time allowed by law for the execu tion of the decree, operates as a sudement of foreclosure and debars the mortgagor from afterwards bringing a second suit to redeem the same pro perty (3) As regards the Calcutta High Court, the only two reported decisions appear to be in conflict (1) In the under-mentioned case, (2) a second sut was allowed on the ground that the first suit did not in default foreclose the right to redeem, and that the cause of action in the two suits was not the same thus evaluating the doctrine of res pulicata. In, however, a subsequent case (3) it was contended that until an order absolute for sale was mide the right to redeem existed, and that the suit should be regarded as a suit to redeem. In overruling this contention, the Court observed as follows "Even if there is no order absolute, the decree miss directing the sale is in existence, and if the right to redeem be still alive, it cannot be enforced by a separate suit."

When a decice declaring a light to partition has not been given effect to by the parties, proceeding to partition in accordance with it, it is competent to the parties, or any of them, if they still continue to be interested in the joint property, to bring another suit for a declaration of a right to a partition in case their right to partition is called in question at a time when, by leason of limitation or otherwise, they cannot put into effect the decree first obtained. In this respect, suits for declaration of right to partition differ from most other suits (4). In this case there was no decree actually making partition, while in the under mentioned case, (5) in which there was a decree directing partition, it was held that such decree operated as res judicata, and the subsequent suit was bailed.

Upon the uniquent arises a logal obligation to discharge it on which an action is maintainal le (1). It is he such an action that the indements of foreign and colonial Courts are supported and enforced and suits on foreign in lements are not infrequent in this country. A smt will lie on a judgment of a Court in a Native State (2) Where an action on a judgment or decree will not give to the plaintiff a hieler or better remeds than he already has there is no advantage in allowing it to le brought, and it would be contrary to the spirit of the Code to do so Where it will give a higher or better remedy the case is different and there are eases in which an action may be the only mode of enforcing a sudement or decree (3) In the case of a domestic sudement ample provisions exist for the execution of the decree not only within the juris diction of the Court hy which it was passed but within any part of the British territories in India And on the principles already adverted to, where provisions have been made in regard to execution and the decree holder can proceed under them he cannot bring a regular smt. In such cases the qualifica tion to the general rule comes into operation the right to sue being taken away by implication

A suit will not lie in a Small Cause Court on a decree of a Subordinate Judge's Court (1) or on a decree of its own (5) as the law makes full provision as to the mode of obtaining satisfaction of such decrees. Nor will a suit lie on a rent decree of the Revenue Court (6) nor in the High Court on a decree of the Small Cause Court (7) otherwise in Bombay in order that the judgmont creditor may have execution against the immovable estate of the debtor (8).

In the under mentioned undefended case (9) under the preceding Code Wilson J held that a suit on a deereo of the High Court would lio in that Court as the decree had remained unsatisfied and it was too late to revive it in the usual way. But this decision has been dissented from by the Bombay High Court (10) A suit has also been held to be on a declaratory decree of which no execution can be taken (11) But a person who has obtained a

10 No Court shall proceed with the trial of any suit in which the matter in issue is also directly and substantially in issue in a previously instituted suit between the same parties, or between parties under whom they or any of them claim lutigating under the same title where such suit is pending in the same or any other Court in British India having jurisdiction to grant the relief claimed, or in any Court beyond the limits of British India established or continued by the Governor General in Council and having like jurisdiction, or before His Majesty in Council

Explanation—The pendency of a suit in a foreign Court does not preclude the Courts in British India from trying a suit

founded on the same cause of action

"Lis pendens"—"The object of the rule contained in sect 12 (the present section) of the Code is to prevent Courts of concurrent junisdiction from simultaneously entertaining and adjudicating upon two parallel litigations in respect of the same cause of action the same subject matter and the same relief. The policy of the law is to confine the plaintiff to one hitigation, thus obviating the possibility of contridictory verdicts by two or more Courts in respect of "the same relief" (8)

The same learned Judge added It is scarcely necessary to any that the rule contained in sect 12 of the Code of Civil Procedure forms no part of the rule of res judicata though the reason upon which it is based is in some respects similar in principle to the doctrine of res judicata. The distinction between the two rules however, is vast The rule in sect 12 (the present section) relates to matters sub sudice, whilst the rule in sect 13 (now sect 11) relates to matters which have passed into rem judicatam. The one bars only a 'sunt', the other hars both the trial of a 'sunt' and of an 'issue' subject to their respective conditions Those conditions are not all the same in sect 12 (the present section) as they are in sect 13 (now sect 11), and the wording of the two sections as to the distinction is so clear that it is not easy to confound the two rules Now, in sect 12 (the present section), before the plea can operate as a har, the second suit must not only raise the same issue as that in the former suit still pending, but it must be for 'the same rehef'"(1) As to this last now, vide post, " Relief" It may be added that if a plaintiff were not confined to one litigation, but were allowed to conduct a number of parallel litigations at the same time, they would result in as many judgments which, if to the same effect, would be uscless and a cause of unnecessary expense If, on the other hand they were to a different effect all would not admit of execution and it would not be possible to decide which should be executed Moreover, contradictory judgments would tend to discredit the administration of justice. The rule, therefore should be such as to receive application only when the various incidents of the suits are so far identical that they may, and if rightly decided should lead to the same judgment (2) Though the conditions of the two rules relating to his pendens and res judicata are different, the expressions used in enumerating them are generally used in the same sense, and reference therefore may be made to the cases cited in the next section The rule of his pendens not only affects a suit brought while another suit is pending, but also alienations of rights or interests in any property made during the pendency of a suit concerning that property (3)

Stay—The words "Except where a suit has been stayed under sect 20" have been omitted. Sect 20 of the last Code dealt with the power of the Court to stay proceedings, but, apart from this the Court had a general juns diction to stay proceedings on the ground of inconvenience attending the trial of different suits in different Courts at the same time. So the High Court hasstryed a suit instituted before it until after the decree in a suit previously instituted at Cahent observing that the two suits to a very great extent covered the same ground and that it was impossible that they should proceed together, as many inconveniences might arise—amongst others difficulties in connection with the filing of documents and talling of accounts and the possibility of a conflict of decisions, adding that it was necessary to follow the general rule that the plaintiff who first brings his suit claiming an account in respect of any particular transactions has a right to have that account taken in the Court in which he has chosen to bring his suit (1) Sect 20 has now been courted

"Proceed with the trial"—This section in the last Code only provided that no suit shall be tried if the same issues were involved in a previously instituted suit in a competent Court. The present Code substitutes the words at the head of the parigraph to explain more clearly the action to be taken by the Court, which is in the nature of a stay of proceedings. The section however is merely intended to secure general convenience. It does not have the institution of a suit and therefore cannot be construed as dispensing with the institution of a suit within the proper time when the law expressly requires such institution (2).

"Suit'—In the under mentioned case (3) the Court without expressing a decided opinion on the point thought that a proceeding in execution being not a suit but only a proceeding in a suit it would be more correct to hold that a proceeding under sect 47 is not a suit within the meaning of this section.

"Matter in issue,"—The matter in issue in the subsequent suit must also be directly and substantially in issue in the previously instituted suit. The subject matter in respect of which the rehef is claimed must be the same in the two suits the principle of his pendens having no application if the subject matter of the subsequent suit is not in any sense the subject matter of the previous suit (4). Where the question of title was the same but the issues were different relating to another plot of land and to another period of time the section was held to have no application (5).

"Previously instituted (pending) suit"—Priority in time is the proper guido in determining which suit should be allowed to proceed (6) and in accordance with the general principle that the Court which first acquires jurisdiction should retain it this rule is formulated. The section says 'instituted', that is mere institution of a suit will give priority without any proceedings having been taken thereunder. A suit ceases to be its pendens when it has been withdrawn and the rule has been held not to apply when the former suit has been withdrawn since the institution of the second suit (7). I suit of course, comes to an end when a decree is passed in it. It is not, however, material whether the suit is pending as an original suit or an appeal. A pending appeal will bar the trial of a subsequent suit (1). The mere applying however for, or obtaining, leave to appeal to the Privy Council cannot of itself amount to the pending of an appeal till such appeal is actually filed, for it may happen that the parties who obtain such leave may never appeal at all against such decree or order (2). It has been held that the appeal is not "to be deemed to relate to the entry of the judgment appealed from so as to defeat the plaintiff action properly brought intermediate the judgment and appeal" (3). In a recent case where there had heen a decree for maintenance, followed two years later by a decree for the sale of the property charged by it, but three more years elapsed before the appheation for execution it was held that owing to this delay the doctrine of lis penders did not apply for the sale had not been during the active prosecution of a contentious suit or proceeding (4)

"Relief"-The last Code enacted that not merely must the matter in issue be the same, but the previous suit must claim the same relief. The cause of action is essentially different from the relief claimed. While the identity, or oven similarity of the relief claimed is not material for the rule of res audicata the identity of the rehef was held essential to the application of the rule of lis pendens So the section was held not to apply where, though the issue may be the same as that in the other suit the relief was not the same (5) And it has been held not to apply to suits between principals and agents for accounts (6) Where the plaintiff in the first instance sucd the defendant for cancellation of a mutni lease and for mesne profits, and then brought a second suit against the defendant to recover arrears of rent for the same period it was held that seet 12 of the last Code did not apply, as it could not be said that the former suit was for the same relief as that claimed in the second suit (7). So again suits for the same dues in respect of different years are not for the same reluf If a suit for a demand for one year should bur the trial of a suit for the same demand for a subsequent year the prolongation of the eather hightion might result in barring the later suit by lapse of the limitation period (9) If the subsequent suit is however for a part of the relief claimed in the first suit its trial was held to be barred by that of the first suit (1) It will however be observed that this section omits the words formerly appearing "for the same relief' This was stated to have been done because the Select Committee were of opinion that the application of the provision should depend not upon the mere prayer of the parties but upon the matter in issue Probably in a large number of cases where the matter in issue is the same the relief deriving as a consequence therefrom will be or should be the same. But however this may be the section apparently substitutes as a test the identity of the matter in issue irrespective of the relief sought upon the proof of the ficts alleged in sneh issue

Res indicate generally considered -These sections embody the doctime of res judicata, which, though it has sometimes been treated in English law as a branch of the doctrine of estoppel, is yet essentially distinct from it Estoppel, which is dealt with by sect 115 of the Evidence Act. proceeds upon the equitable principle of altered situation, whilst the doctrine of res sudicata proceeds on the principle that there should be a determination to litigation, and that a defendant should not in respect of the same matter be herassed by several suits. Estoppel is a part of the law of evidence whilst res audicata belongs to the province of procedure strictly so called (1) Perhaps the shortest way to describe the difference between the two is to say that whilst the plea of res judicata probibits the Court from entering into an inquiry at all as to a matter already adjudicated upon an estoppel probibits a party after the moury has already been entered upon from proving anything which would contradict his own previous declarations or acts to the prejudice of snother party who, relying upon those declarations or acts altered his position. In other words res sudicata probibits an inquiry in limine whilst an estoppel is only a piece of evidence (2)

The English doctrine of res judicata was adopted in this country before the promulgation of the first Code of 1859. As the Judicial Committee observed (3) upon the statement of the rule in the Duchess of Kingston's case, there is nothing technical or peculiar to the law of England in the rule as so stated. It was recognized by the civil law and was consistent with sect 2 of the Code of 1859. Though, however consistent with it, sect 2 of that Code was not identical with and fell considerably short of it (4). It only provided for bar by judgment, and did not deal with the remaining portion of the rule relating to the bar of the trial of an issue by judgment on that issue which has sometimes been called bar by verdict. The gist of this latter rule is that an actual decision on any matter directly in issue in a suit is conclusive of that issue in every subsequent suit brought on any cause and for any purpose or object. Notwithstanding this defect in the rule the Courts acture.

on general principles, recognized the conclusiveness of judgments as to issues also, the principle of res judicata, whether specially enacted or not, being an essential part of the law of procedure in all countries (1) Other difficulties also arcse with reference to the meaning to be attached to the words "cause of action," in sect 2 of the Code of 1859 This section was therefore very considerably modified in the Code of 1877, res judicate being made applicable to issues, and the identity of the cause of action being replaced by that of matter in issue. The effect of this was to provide for an estoppel against defendants the words "suit or issue" being effective to estop a defendant from defence as well as a plaintiff from attack (2). Another material alteration made was the express extension of the doctrine of res judicata with certain limitations to foreign judgments, the limitations heing enacted by sect 14 (3)

In the rule of res judicata, as enacted in 1877, only two alterations were, pilor to the present Code, made which were to a great extent of a verbal oharacter One of such alterations was to make that clear which had been previously decided namely, that the competency of jurisdiction in regard to the Court trying the former suit was as to the subsequent suit also. The scotion even in its final form under the last Code was not complete or exhaustive of the effect of res judicata, (4) which, as a principle, exists independently of the Statute enacting it (5) It did not, for instance, deal with judgments in rem, nor with that of parties represented by, though not claiming under, the parties to the former suit (6) In fact, as observed by Sir Whitley Stokes the question of res judicata is a subject of which the importance in a country inhabited by a litigious population is only equalled by the difficulty of dealing with it clearly, concisely, and accurately in a legislative ennet ment (7) The same remarks apply to the present Code (8) In the Bill as first drafted an attempt was made to clahorately and exhaustively formulate the rule This arrangement was simplified by the Select Committee which con The framers of the present draft considered that even this sidered that draft modified attempt to make a complete statement of the rule of res judicala was

same grounds, and this would obviously be defeated by allowing a decree holder to abstain from putting his decree in force, and proceed again on the same cause as before (1) A plea of res judicata must be based on the grounds of the decision actually stated in the judgment (2) If a judgment be improperly obtained, so that it never ought to have been signed, when set aside it ought to be treated as never having existed So judgment obtained against a dead man cannot operate as res judicata in a subsequent suit (3)

"Gourt."—The term, in so far as it is used in connection with the subse quent suit, means a Court governed by the Code From the provisions of sect 14 it is shown that the operation of the section is not confined to decrees passed by British Indian Courts (4) The word "Court," therefore as used in connection with the previous suit, includes a foreign Court, and the Court of competent jurisdiction, which is referred to in the first paragraph, includes a foreign competent Court,(5) the recognition of a foreign judgment as res judicata being a position of the positive law of British India (6) Upon an issue whether the defendant in possession of ataluga had lost title by inheritance thereto by reason of having been validly adopted out of his own family held that an awaid to that effect of a committee of taluqdars was not a decision by a "Court" within the meaning of this section (7)

"Try."—This word, which means the formal method of examining and adjudicating on a metter in dispute, shows that the rule in question has nothing to do with the admissibility of a judgment in evidence and which judgmont may be admissible under sects 10-44 of the Evidence Act, even where it does not fulfil the requirements of this section (8). There is a conflict as to whether the doctrine of res judicate applies only to a trial by a Court of original jurisdiction, or also to a disposal by an appellate Court. The Calcutta High Court has, in the under mentioned case,(9) held in effect that a trial by an original Court only is contemplated and that the section has no application to the disposal of an appeal, and that when there is no res judicate at the time of the trial of the original suit the appellate Court is bound to decide the appeal on the ments. The contrary view, however, is taken by the Allahabad (10) and Madras (11) High Courts, which have held that the rule contained

The Panjah Chief Court appear to have taken the same view (1) Similarly when there were cross appeals in a suit a decision in one appeal was held to be respudicate in the other, though as the suit was the same, this section could not apply (2). The correct view is that the date, not of institution but of decision, determines the application of the principle of res sudecide. See Evolantion I

Sunt —It would hardly be necessary to say, unless the contrary had been maintuned, that criminal proceedings are not a sunt, (3) and therefore no finding of a Criminal Court can be res judicata in a civil sunt, both the parties to and character of the two proceedings being entirely different Similarly it has often been held that the proceedings in the Criminal Court are not in general evidence in the Civil Court and that a Civil Court is not hound to adopt the view taken by the Criminal Court as to the oral or documentary evidence (4). The term "sunt" has not heen defined (5) At the same time it has been said that seet 647 (now seet, 141) shows that the law does not necessarily consider every proceeding in which there are parties, evidence, argument, and decision, to he is sunt, there herag proceedings other than suits and appeals (6). Proceedings therefore under the insolvency sections of the Panjah Laws Act have been held not to be a suit (7). Nor are proceedings under the Land Acquisition Act, the object and nature of which differ considerably from an ordinarily civil suit, a suit (8). errors in a decree, a suit,(1) nor is an application for review (2) Miscellaneous civil proceedings will be a suit when they are treated as a suit by the Legisla ture (3) In a proceeding upon an application for probate, the only question to he determined is whether the will is true or not. It is not the province of the Court to determine any question of title with reference to the property covered by the will (4) In the last mentioned case the Court further observed "And it is noteworthy that a proceeding under the Probate and Administration Act is not a suit properly so called, but takes the form of a suit according to the provisions of the Civil Procedure Code (see sect 83) That being so, we do not see how the judgment of the Allahabad High Court could be regarded as con cluding the plaintiff as to the title to the estate either under sect 13 of the Civil Procedure Code or under the general principles of res judicata" But in a recent Full Bench decision of the Bombay High Court where in a contentious proceeding for Prohate a will had been held not proved and Prohate refused, and the widow then brought a suit for recovery of the property of the deceased from the defendants who held it as executors under that will, it was held that since contentious proceedings for Prohate must take the form (as nearly as possible) of a suit they constitute a suit within the meaning of this section and therefore the Probate judgment operated as res judicata (5) In considering upon the question of competency whether the word "suit 'should he construed as inoluding an appeal, it is held that the powers of the Court in which the suit was instituted must be looked at, and not those of the Court by which the suit was decided on appeal (6) The draft Bill made the section applicable to a suit "or other proceeding, " but this suggestion has not been adopted As to this, the Special Committee in their report say, "The Committee recognized that a proceeding does not come within the language of that section but they think it better not to deal with this point in express terms for the reason that the applicability of the doctrine of res judicata to certain proceedings is not open to doubt, and they foresee that any express reference to proceedings in a crystallised definition might only lead to difficulties (L. cause of action was a separate suit. So if a suit for the recovery of one bond has been dismissed, on the ground that the bond was not repaid, the decision would be res judicata so far as the claim for that bond is concerned in a subsequent suit brought for the recovery of that and other bonds on the ground of the same renavment (1)

As regards appeals, vide ante, p 35, note to seet 2, sub voc , "Decree"

It was sometimes held, before 1892, and was enacted in that year hy an addition to sect 617 (now sect 141), that execution proceedings are not miscellancous proceedings but proceedings in auts. But though the word "suit" includes all proceedings in execution of the deeree massed in the suit, the section does not apply where the proceedings, both earlier and subsequent, are in the same aut For the section requires that the matter should have been in issue in another separate suit, and each separate amplication for execution of a decree in a suit is not a separate suit (2) But though in such a case this section will not apply, a prior decision in the same suit may have hinding force, depending not upon this section but upon general principles of law, otherwise there would be no end to literation. So in the last mentioned case which was reversed on anneal to the Privy Council, the latter held that though the matter decided was not decided in a former suit but in a proceeding, of which the application in which the orders reversed by the High Court were made was merely a continuation, yet it was as hinding upon the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is hinding upon the parties in every proceeding in that auit, or as a final judgment in a suit is hinding upon them in carrying the judgment into execution. It could not, in abort, he held that because the prior order was made in the same and, what it decided remained open to contest afterwards between the parties, although if it had been made in another aut it would have been final under the former sect 13 (3) As a fact. the bar in such cases is due to the principle which has been designated the "judgment of the case," (4) the principle which is distinct from res judicata but which in the absence of any specific name has admetimes been spoken of as res judicata as falling within the literal signification of that expression, under which a decision in a prior stage of the same civil suit or proceeding operates as a bar to a fresh decision on the same point in the subsequent stages of the same suit or proceeding (5) Thus it has been held that though an application as the matter in issue in the two cases will be different. So a decree directing periodical payments has for its purpose been derined to be a separate decree in regard to each of such payments (1). And a decree confirmed in appeal has also been deemed to be different from what it was before the confirmation, and a dismissal of an application for the execution of the original decree has been held to be no bar to an application for execution of the appellate decree (2).

"Issue"—The principle of res judicata applies both to the trial of suits and the trial of issues. A suit ends in a dismissal or a decree in whole or in part An issue ends in a finding, and the rule contained in the section enacts that not only is a suit which has once been tried and determined not again maintainable, but an issue which has once been directly and substantially raised and decided earnot be hitgated a second time. The principle upon which the rule is based applying equally to issues as to suits (3).

The first clause of the section is not well constructed. It would be clearer if it run, "No Court shall try any issue which, or any suit in which, the matter directly and substantially in issue has been," etc (1). The trial of a substantially in issue in it (i.ide ante, first paragraph). An issue is said to arise "when a proposition of law or fact, which a plaintiff must allege in order to show a right to sue, is affirmed by the one party and denied by the other. And see Explanations III, and IV (2).

There is nothing in the Code to restrict the application of the rule of respudicate to issues of fact as distinct from issues of law. In the original draft Bill it was proposed to affirm the view that a pire finding of law might operate as resjudicate, but to limit the operation of the principle to adjudications on the ments, with a view to excluding, for instance, dismissals on a pre-liminary question of jurisdiction. Apparently it was considered that this was a matter which should be left to the Courts to determine. It has been said that a point of law can never be resjudicata (6). But it is submitted that the rule thus broadly stated is not sound. It is difficult, however, to reconcile the decisions on the point.

The principle of res judicata does not depend for its application upon the question whether the decision which is to be used as a bar was a right decision or a wrong decision in law or in facts and it is immaterial whether the decree set up as a bar was rightly or wrongly passed in law or in fact (7). It is obvious that if this were not so there would be no findity, for in all cases the previous decision might be challenged for error. The force of res judicata attaching to a decision by a Court on an issue of law will not be affected, even if the decision is subsequently disapproved by a Full Bench of the High Court to which that Court is subordinate (1) Where the question is one not purely of law, but of mixed law and fact, there will be res audicata. In such case the law has been applied to a particular state of facts, and if these facts come again in issue in another suit, the judgment on these facts, whether it rightly or wrongly applies the law, is res judicata (2) So where in a previous suit a particular stipulation, contained in a particular kabuliat, had been held to be valid as between the parties, it was held not open to the Court subsequently to try the issue, whether that particular stipulation was valid or not, the question being a inixed question of law and fact and whether the previous decision was or was not erroneous (3) It has been recently held that though where the question is one of law the judgment is res judicata where the parties seek to litigate again on the same cause of action, yet where the dispute relates to matters which had formed a subsidiary consideration in the former suit, though the causes of action in the suits may be different, the application of this principle is limited to matters distinctly put in issue and determined in the former suit and to questions of fact or mixed questions of fact and law (4) The Madras High Court has held that a Court is precluded from inquity into the soundness of the law of this previous decision in respect of the precise subject matter or immediate purpose of that suit, but that provided the decision in the latter suit does not in any way question the correctness of the former decree of in any way affect its operation, an orroncous decision on a question of law in a previous suit is no bar (5) The operation of a decree as res judicata, so far at any rate as the subject matter of a direct adjudication contained in the decree is concerned, can in no way be affected, in the absence of fraud or collusion, by the fact that the suit was the result of a mistake of law, or that the decree proceeded on such mistake The remedy, if any, in such a case can only be by way of review, and not by separate suit for relief on the ground of mistake (6)

results might arise if an erroneous decision on a pure question of law in a previous suit is held to operate as res nudicata in a subsequent suit relating to a different subject matter, for an errogeous decision might have the effect of altering the law applicable as between the parties. Though the language of this section may perhaps make it apply to such a ease, it is very doubtful whether it was intended to have such application (1) It has been submitted that the facts decided in the first suit cannot be disputed, and for the nurnose of the conclusiveness of those facts, but no further, the law applied must be accented Thus if a decree in a suit to declare a mortgage invalid proceed upon the constitutionality of a statute the parties afterwards cannot deny the validity of the statute in question, when the mortgages attempts to foreclose. It could hardly be true that they could not raise the question again in a suit moon a different subject matter (2) A previous construction of law between the parties it has been held (3) ought not to be followed after that law has been replaced by another So a decision upon a point of limitation given when either Act XIV of 1859 or Act IX of 1871 was in force, and which was subsequently held to be erroneous, was also held not to be res judicate in a suit which was brought when the present Limitation Act was in force (4) In a recent case in the Calcutta High Court where after the preliminary decree in a mortgage and before the final decree the Chota Nagpur Tenancy Act was extended to the district in which the property was situate it was held that the sale was forludden by that Act and the judgment debter was not estended from bringing this to the notice of the Court (5)

The matter directly and substantially in issue in the second suit or issue must be the same matter which was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit—The former judgment is conclusive only upon the same matter (6). Where causes of action are different the principle

cuch particular case (1) The rule is that where a final decree is couched in general terms, the extent to which it ought to be regarded as res sudregta can only be determined by ascertaining what were the real matters of controversy in the cause (2) The leading principles of res audicate were thus enunciated by Sir William de Grev in the Duchess of Kingston's case (3) "From the variety of cases relative to judgments being given in evidence in civil suits, these two deductions seem to follow as generally true. first that the judgment of a Court of concurrent invisduction directly upon the point is as a plea, a har or as evidence. conclusive, between the same parties, upon the same matter, directly in question in another Court . secondly, that the judgment of a Court of exclusive jurisdiction, directly upon the point, is, in like manner, conclusive upon the same matter, between the same parties coming incidentally in question in another Court, for a different purpose But neither the judgment of a concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction is evidence of any matter which came collaterally in question, though within their jurisdiction, nor of any matter incidentally cognizable, nor of any matter to be inferred by argument from the judgment "(4) Provided the immediate subject of the decision be not withdrawn from its operation so as to defeat the direct object of the decision, the parties may litigate matters incidentally or collaterally in issue between them for any other nurpose as to which they may come in question. The test applicable is whether the question decided in the previous suit was in substance part of the cause of action, or whether it was only ancillary to the main cause (5) The cases upon this branch of the rule of res indicate may be divided into two classes (6) (a) The class of cases in which it has been held that the metter directly and substantially in issue in the second suit or in an issue in such second suit, was, not directly and substantially, but colliterally or incidentally,

The mere fact that a claim has been included in a previous suit, without its having been directly and substantially put in issue and decided, does not, upon the dismissal of that suit, preclude a subsequent suit upon it (3). But, on the other hand, the mere fact that an issue was not framed, will not prevent the operation of the rule of res judicata, provided that in substance the matter has been heard and deter nimed (4). A decision may be by implication (5). The fact that the reasoning upon which the former judgment was based is equally applicable to the second suit, does not give the former judgment the force of res judicata in the second case (6). But a matter in issue may be one of law as well as of fact, and where a recurring hability is the subject of a claim, a previous judgment, evidence would support them both (1) "At one time the test applied to discover whether a finding was incidental or not was the fact of its being embodied in, or excluded from, the decree, and many cases appear to have been expressly decided upon this ground Two propositions however, appear to be well settled (a) that the decree itself is not the test of what is or is not res rudicata, but that the question in each case is, What did the Court really decide? Res judicata, in other words, is matter of substance, (2) (b) that where the decree of a Court is not based upon a finding, but is in spite of it (3) such a finding cannot work an estoppel"(4) A finding in a judgment to operate as res judicata, the Court being a Court of jurisdiction competent to try the subsequent suit, must be material and necessary to support the precise and particular ground or grounds on which the decree, or some operative part of it, was made, otherwise the finding must be considered either as superseded by the decree or as entirely immaterial or as no more than moderatal and subsidiary to the main question in the suit, although in the latter case the finding may have been necessary to the decision of the suit A matter cannot be said to be "directly and substantially in issue," unless and until it is or becomes material for the decision of the suit to find as to it (5) There is no such thing as constructive estempel. The question is not whether the previous judgment was right, but whether it finally decided the matter in issue (6) The fact that the reasoning upon which a former judg ment was based was equally applieable to the second case has been held (7) not to give the former judgment the force of res judicata in the second case The rejection of applications to set aside an ex parte decree under O IX 1 13 (formerly sect 108), post and sale in execution thereof under O XXI r 89 (formerly sect 311) post, relate only to specific matters in that suit, and is therefore no but to a fresh suit to set aside the decree on the ground that the whole suit was fraudulent (8) The finding of a Criminal Court is not of course, res sudicata in a civil action and no fact found or proved in a Criminal Court is on that account to be taken to be proved in a Civil Court (inde ante, "Suit') judicata, it is not sufficient merely that an issue on the same point should have been raised in the former suit, although that issue may have been incidentally decided, but it must appear that the matter referred to was alleged by one party, and either denied, or admitted expressly or imphedly, by the other,(1) and the issue must further have been a maternal one (2). Matter not put in question by the parties, and not necessary to the adjudication of the subject—matter of the suit, is immaterial, and any observation of the Court thereupon is obter dictum, which can have no effect in any other litigation (3). The rule of English law, that where the allegation on record is uncertain there is no resignated as also the rule embodied in this section. "If a thing be not directly and precisely alleged, it shall be no estoppel." That rule is reproduced in this explanation (4) Matter alleged in the written statements of the parties may in subsequent proceedings be relevant as an admission, but it will not operate as an estoppel, unless, being admitted or demed, and found in favour of the person alleging it, it forms the basis of judicial decision (5)

Explanation IV —This Explanation deals with matters constructively in isomer suit, (6) projiding that any matter which might and ought to have been made ground of defence or attack in a former suit, shall be deemed to have been a matter directly and substantially in issue in such suit (7) In only incidental and not a matter directly and substantially in issue in the suit. The addition, however, has apparently been considered unnecessary. It has been held that if the effect of a decision in a suit is necessarily inconsistent with a defence which ought to have been missed (but was not raised) that defence must under this section be deemed to have been finally decided against the defendant who ought to have raised it (1)

Explanation V .- According to the provisions of this Explanation, and rchef claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purpose of the section, be deemed to have been refused (2) The legal effect of this Explanation is that of treating the omission to grant the rehef asked for in the plaint as equivalent to an express refusal, and the claim thereto in a fresh suit as res judicala (3) This Explanation refers to relief applied fer, which the Court is bound to grant with reference to the matters directly and substantially in issue (4) The words "relief claimed" apply only to something which forms part of the "claim" strictly so called, that is, something which the plaintiff may claim as of right, something included in his cause of action and which if he establishes his cause of action the Court has no discretion to refuse They do not include something which the plaintiff cannot in the suit claim as of right, but can only claim in the sense of an appeal to the discretion of the Court and which the Court may refuse in the exercise of its discretion on grounds of general expediency or otherwise oven if the cause of action is fully established (5) Even if the suit as regards the relief claimed has been wrongly dismissed, the plaintiff cannot sue again for the same relief (6) The Pxplanation does not apply where the Court is silent on a head of rehef only claimed as ancillary to the main rehef, and which hy implication is rather granted than refused. It only applies where the Court is silent on an independent head of relief claimed and duly controverted (7) A decree cannot be superseded by the mere omission of the Court executing the decree to pass orders ou a claim made under it (8)

The former suit must have been a suit between the same parties or between parties under whom they or any of them claim, litigating under the same title—This is an application of the principle contained

Explanation V - According to the provisions of this Lxplanation, any relief claimed in the plaint, which is not expressly granted by the decree, shall, for the purpo c of the section, be deemed to have been refused (2) The legal effect of this Lyntingtion is that of treating the omission to grant the relief asked for in the plaint as equivalent to an express refusal, and the claim thereto in a fresh suit as res judicata (3) This Lxi lanation refers to relief applied for, which the Court is bound to grant with reference to the matters directly and substantially in issue (i) The words "relief claimed" apply only to semething which forms part of the "claim" strictly so called, that is, something which the plaintiff may claim as of right, something included in his cause of action and which if he establishes his cause of action the Court has no discretion to refuse. They do not include something which the plaintiff cannot in the suit claim as of right, but can only claim in the sense of an appeal to the discretion of the Court and which the Court may refuse in the overcise of its discretion on grounds of general expediency or otherwise even if the cause of action is fully established (5). Even if the suit as regards the relief claimed has been wrongly dismissed, the plaintiff cannot sue again for the same relief (6) The Paplanation does not apply where the Court is silent on a head of relief only claimed as ancillary to the main relief, and which by implication is rather granted than refused. It only applies where the Court is silent on an independent head of relief claimed and duly controverted (7) A decree cannot be superseded by the mere omission of the Court executing the decree to pass orders on a claim made under it (8)

baziar was held by the Privy Council not to be res judicata in a subsequent suit for possession of a share of the baziar, in which suit all the parties, plaintiff, and defendants, claimed under the plaintiff in the former suit. Such a plai, however, might well be a defence to a hostile claim by persons asserting a title under the defendant zemindar in the former suit, against the claiming under the plaintiff zemindar in that suit (1). A decision of a mitterial issue in a suit against one who is the representative of an estate, bars a suit by the true owner on the same issue (2). And a representative of the person is bound by a decree against the person whom he represents, but it is essential that there should be an adjudication as to the fact that he is representative (3). A verdet against a man suing in one capacity will not estop him when he sues in another distinct capacity, and, in fact, is a different person (4). The principle of res judicate has no application in a dispute between parties all of whom claim under the person in whose favour the decision in the provious suit was given (5).

Hindu widow—A decree fanly and properly obtained against a Hindu widow, relating to her husband's estite, hinds the roversionary heirs, the whole estate being for the time vested in her, absolutely for some purposes, though in some respects for a qualified interest (6). It was held under the Limitation Act of 1859, that when the widow as plaintiff sues to recover the husband's estate, held adversely to her by the defendant, a decree against her would bind the roversioner and that adverse possession, which would bir her right of suit, if sho were alive, on the ground of limitation, would equally but that of the roversioner (7). But under Article 111 of the present Act, it has been decided that a roversioner who succeeds to immove able property has twelve years to hring his suit for possession from the time when his estate falls into appellant having been a party to a former suit, in which the respondent obtained a decree for possession of the estate in question as mother and heiress of the last proprietor, is barred by such decree from afterwards accovering possession, on the ground that the respondent is not such heiress. Although such decree barred the appellant from setting up in this suit a family custom for the purpose of showing that he was entitled to possession during the life of the respondent, he is not thereby debarred from showing that upon her death, if he survives, he will be entitled, under such custom, to succeed her, and therefore to have a certain deed executed by her declared illegal and in-operative after her death (1)

Benamidar.—Where the parties are parties in fact, although not in name, is in the case of a person who buys an estate for himself, but has it conveyed bename in the name of another, a decree properly obtained by or against the benaundure is binding upon the real owner, the presumption being that the benamidar instituted the suit with his authority and consent (2)

Co-defendants —Where it was broadly contended that there would be no ies judicata, as between eo defendants, it was held that such contention was incorrect. Section 11 does not preclude the decisions upon any issue from operating as res judicata, merely hecause the issue is ruised as between co defendants, if the matter was directly and substantially in issue in a former suit, and the other necessary conditions are satisfied. The words "between the same parties" in this section, quality not only the words "between the same parties" in this section, quality not only the words "former suit int the whole expression "in issue in a former suit." Therefore an issue hat ed and decided as between co-defendants in a former suit may be resjudicated in a subsequent suit, in which they are urringed as plaintiff and defendant (3). When the same parties were contending in the former suit, in fact though not in form, as where they were co-defendants on the record, but their interests were different, and there was an issue between them which was decided, its decision is a bir to a second suit or defence a using the same issue between them, which is the term of plaintiff and defend in (4). cause of action for the injured party in the case of either a joint contract or a joint toit, and that cause of action is exhausted and satisfied by a judg ment being obtained by the plaintiff against all or any of the joint contractors or joint wrongdoers whom he chooses to sue (1) But the rule is otherwise where there is a joint and several hability, a decree against one of several joint and several promisors without satisfaction will not bar a second suit (2) And in the under-mentioned case a decision in a suit against a banian was held not to be rescudicate in a suit for the same money against a manager, the liability not being joint but being based on distinct contracts (3) Conversely, where a plaintiff has failed in a suit against one of several joint debtors, a judgment recovered by one of such debtors cannot be pleaded as a defence to a subsequent action against the other joint debtors in respect of the same cause, unless the plea shows that the indgment was recovered on a ground which operated as a discharge of all (4) It has however, been more recently held by the Allahabad High Court that the effect of sect 43 of the Contract Act heing to exclude the light of a joint contractor to be sued along with his co contractors, the lule laid down in King v Hoare, and Kendall v Hamilton supra is no longer applicable to eases arising in India at all events in the Moinssil since the passing of that Act, and a judgment obtained against some only of the joint contractors and remaining unsatisfied is no bar to a second suit on the contract against the other joint contractors (5)

Father of joint Hindu family—Where the Hindu son in a joint family becomes entitled by reason of his birth and in his own right a right which he can enforce against his father he does not claim anded him within the meaning of this section (6). Therefore the dismissal of a suit for redemption of a mortgage of joint family property brought by the father in a joint Hindu family alone was held not a bar to a subsequent suit for redemption by the sons, massimuch as their title was not through their father, but was separate and independent (7). The question whether a Hindu father in a particular suit, in which he alone of the family is a particular stitle in the head one of the family is a particular stitle in the father of the case. Held therefore, under the circumstances of the case, that an erroneous decree in yet ment obtained against a Hindu father we not restricted as subsequent.

suit by the son for recovery of the bolding (1) An auction purchaser of the right of a Hindu father in joint property cannot raise the plet that a mort, age was made without legal necessity as long as there is still time for the sons to challenge the purchase (2). The obligation of a Hindu son to pay his father's debt is not an obligation which he had incurred jointly with his father, and the cruditor's cause of ection against the father and the son is not a single cause of action which is exhausted upon a decree being obtained against one of them only. A judgment recovered, against his father only, does not therefore bar a sint against the son (3). Where the plaintiff had such the defendant's father for a declaration of his right to a share of property, which he claimed as ancestral property governed by Mitaksharalaw, and had obtained a decree, the defendant's father's place of a custom of prinogeniture being rejected, it was held in a subsequent suit by the plaintiff for partition of the property that the defendant (who had not been a party to the former sint) was harred from pleading a custom of prinogeniture (4).

Manager of same —The manager of a joint Hindu family sung or the first such acts in representative capacity. He can execute decrees on behalf of the joint family and receive payments and give receipts which will be biading on it (3). Where, therefore, the interest of a joint and undivided family heing in issue, one member of the family prosecuted or defended a suit, such a decree may afterwards he considered as hinding upon all the members of the family, their interest being sufficiently represented in the suit, (6) and the presumption heing that he is acting for the family, unless it were made out that he acted and professed to act for hunself alone (7). In defining, however, the relation of the managing member to the joint family and estate we are brought into contact with a relationship which has no counterpart in English law, neither the term partner nor principal, nor agent, nor even co parcener will strictly apply (8)

Karnavan — The karnavan er managug memher of a Malahar taruad (Amily) is in a similar position to a Hindu father under the Mitakshara law And a decree against him may in some cases bind the members (9) It was, however, later held by a Full Bench reviewing the preceding cases that a decree in a suit in which the karnatan of a nambudra illom or marumakkatayam tarwad is, in his representative capacity, joined as a defendant, and which he honestly defends, is biuding upon the other members of the family not actually made parties (1)

Shebait —Where a shehait has incurred debts in the service of an idol, for the benefit and preservation of its property, his position is analogous to that of a manager for an infant heir,(2) and decrees properly obtained against him in respect of debts so incurred are hinding upon succeeding shebaits. For if such debts and the judgments founded upon them were not held to be thus binding on successors, the consequence would be that no shehait would he able to obtain assistance in times of need (3)

Managers Guardians—In the case cited below,(4) the decision of a Forest Settlement Officer, upon an inquiry held under the Boundary Act of 1860, at which inquiry the plaintiff, then a minor, was represented by a manager of his estate appointed under sect 8 of Regulation V of 1804, was held to be res judicata in a suit to recover the land. A manager of an estate, who has obtained a certificate under Act XL of 1858, is the guardian of infant co preprietors, and represents them fully in suits for money advanced in reference to the estate (5). The fact that the plauntiff, a minor, had through his guardian actively intervened in proceedings to set aside a sale of property in which he and his father were jointly interested as members of a Mitakshara family, was held to be no bar to a suit to recover the property the purchaser having at the sale acquired the interest of the father only (6)

Minor—To maintain the plan of res judicate it must appear that the person whose interest it is sought to bind was in some way a party to the suit An intention that a suit should be for the benefit of a minor is insufficient. The minor must be properly represented in it (7). A decree passed against an infant properly represented is binding upon him like a decree passed against an adult, but it is open to the infant to impeach such decree by a separate suit in cases where his guardian has been guilty of fraud or negligence in allowing the decree to he passed against him (1) It is only where fraud or negligence is proved on the part of the guardian of a minor that the right to bring a suit to set aside a previous decision can be claimed by a minor or his administrator, where no fraud or negligence is proved a previous decision will operate as a bar (2)

Mortgagor -The acts of a mortgagor prior to the mortgage bind his mortgagee , (3) but his acts subsequent to the mortgage do not . so that a suit by the mortgagor subsequent to his mortgage, and not brought at the instance or with the concurrence of the mortgagee, does not bind the latter (4) The proprietor of an estate cannot be said to represent the whole estate after he has mortgaged it (5) A decree obtained by the mortgagees against the original mortgagors, the vendors of the appellants, was held to be no evidence against the appellants, purchasers of the interests of the mortgagors, if they were no parties to that decree, and if the transfer to them was before the institution of the suit in which that decree was passed, and the purchasers were in no way bound by the result of that suit (6) Where a mortgagor obtained a decree for redemption, which was not executed. and subsequently sold the equity of redemption to the plaintiff, who sued the mortgagee for redemption, it was held that the suit was not barred by the former decree as the relation of mortgagor and mortgagee had not been terminated, and the right to redeem was inseparable from the relation as long as it existed (7)

Lessor and Lessee —A lessee claims under his lessor, but a lessor does not claim under his lessee, so that a decision in a suit by the lessee to eject a stranger does not har a suit by the lesser against the same person with the same object (8) So also decrees obtained against the registered tenants of a

tenure were held madmissible in evidence against the real owner of the tenue, who was not a party to the suits obtained, and who did not claim through the parties against whom the decrees were passed (1) And a suit by a lessor against a rawat to set aside a pottali is not barred by the fact that the pottali has been declared genuine in a suit by the plaintiff's ticcadar against the same defendant (2) Where two porsons each claim title to land in the possession of a tenant, and one of them sues the tenant for rent in a competent Court, and the other intervenes and claims title, and the issue is confested and finally decided that the tenant should pay his rent to one of them, the title cannot be contested in a subsequent suit between the two claimants (3) A decree obtained in a previous suit for rent by an maradar does not operate against the tenant as res judicata on the question whether the relation of land lord and tenant exist in a subsequent suit for rent brought by the superior landlord (4) As to suits for the recovery of cesses (5) and rents, see cases also below (6) On dismissal of a suit for rent on denial of relationship of landlord and tenaut, the plaintiff may suo again for ejectment, (7) though where the tenant sets up his own title to the land, the decision on the issue of title may be res judicata (8)

Partition -The right to enforce it is a legal incident of a joint tenancy, and as long as such tenancy subsists so long may any of the joint tenants apply to Court for partition (9)

Different titles -The words "litigating under the same title" do not refer to the identity of the ground of action, but mean that the question must have been raised and decided in the same right that is to say in the right of the parties to the second suit and not in the right of any other person. Thus if one is made defendant in an official capacity the judgment will not bind him personally, and sice tersa. A plaintiff sung as next heir to his uncle was held not barred by a decision against his father, masinuch as he claimed under a title not derived from his father (10) A suit against an elder brother for maintenanco was held not to be barred by a previous order made upon other grounds dismissing a claim for maintenance against the father. The adjudication in the previous suit was not between the brothers, but between the plaintiff

A suit by persons representing the public is not barred by a decision in a previous suit by the same plaintiff in their individual and private capacity (2). In a previous suit by the same plaintiff in their individual and private capacity (2). In a previous suit in which plaintiff had been a party it had been attempted to assert plaintiff it title to a piece of land occupied by the defendants by proving that they held the same by surtue of an alleged specific lease. The Court had held that no such lease had been executed. Plaintiff now claimed the land as belonging to bis devision, and since to recover it on the strength of his title, he also set up the allege I leave once more. Held that though the question of the validity of the clase was resignificate, plaintiff was at liberty to sue also on the strength of bis title, independently of the lease and he was not estopped from so sung by the fact that the former suit had been based upon the lease alone (3). A claim on a Lanam is a claim arising ex contractu, while a claim on title against a trespasser is founded on text (1).

Miscellaneous -The purchaser of land at a sale by the Government for the recovery of arrears of revenue under the sale laws buys free of encumbrances, and is therefore not bound by the decision in a suit brought by or against the former owner (5) It has been beld in Madras that a priest of a temple as the representative of a former priest, is bound by a decree in a suit brought by the latter to establish his right to damages for the invasion of his rights as priest (6) The co sharer of an estate cannot be hound by a decision in a suit for rent brought by another co sharer against a tennat (7) Where all the coaditions prescribed by sect 11 exist the fact that in the first suit the defendant was an execution creditor and in the second he is a purchaser at an execution sale makes no difference as to the second suit being res audicata A privity exists between an execution creditor and a purchaser at a Court salo, the latter representing the former in so far as he had a right to bring the property to sale in execution of his decree (8) As to a suit by the larnam of a mitta (9) by one claiming as the dharmakarta of a decasthanam, (10) and by one of five trustees in whom the uraima right over a decasan was vested . Explanation VI -This Explanation provides that where persons higher bona fide in respect of a public or private light claimed in common for them selves and others, all persons interested in such right shall, for the purpose of the section, be deemed to claim under the persons so litigating (I) It has heen held that the Courts should be careful in their application of this Explana tion, which should not be applied to any case which does not come within its very wording, (2) and that it only applies to cases where several different persons claim an easement or other right under one common title, as for instance, where the inhabitants of a village claim by custom a right of pasturage over the same tract of land, or to take water from the same spring or well (3) And, therefore, it does not apply to a prescriptive right claimed by an individual in respect of his own house and premises (4) This Explana tion does not refer to the case of a defendant at all but only to the case of a plaintiff (5) But it is not in terms so limited. One party having a right in common with others is not at liberty or authorized to sue in his own name to establish the right of the others except by their authority. This Explanation must therefore be read with the provisions of rule 3, post, and the principles to he found in that rule (6) A right to relief can be said to he claimed "in common" only as between parties who would be benefited by such rehef if granted, and who have such an interest in the relief claimed that they could join as eo plaintiffs (7) The inclusion of public rights in the amended Explanation is to give due offect to suits relating to public nuisances, as to which see the new sect 91, post

The Court which decided such former suit must have been a Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit or the suit in which such issue is subsequently raised—In order to make an idjudication by one Court final and conclusive in another Court, the first Court must have been possessed of a jurisdiction (3) sufficient to try the matter

lowest grade competent to try it For instance in Bengal, by the Bengal Civil Court Act, No VI of 1871, the purisdiction of a Munsif extends only to original suits in which the amount or value of the subject matter in dispute does not exceed Rs 1000 The qualifications of a Munsi and the authority of his judgment would not be the same as those of a District or of a Subordinate Judge, who have jurisdiction in civil suits without any limit of amount. In their Lordships' opinion, it would not be proper that the decision of a Munsif upon (for instance) the validity of a will or of an adoption in a suit for a small portion of the property affected by it should be conclusive in a suit before a District Judge or in the High Court for property of a large amount, the title to which might depend upon the will or the adoption Other similar cases are mentioned in the judgment of the Chief Justice It is true that there is an appeal from the Munsif's decision, but that upon the facts would be to the District Court, and not to the High Court And that the decision should be conclusive would be still more improper as regards many other of the various Courts in India, the qualifications of whose Judges differ greatly By taking concurrent juris diction to mean concurrent as regards the pecuniary limit as well as the subject matter, this evil or inconvenience is avoided, and although it may be desirable to put an end to litigation the inefficiency of many of the Indian Courts makes it advisable not to be too stringent in preventing a higgait from proving the truth of his case"(1) And the Council, in a later portion of the judgment, say, 'that by Court of competent jurisdiction, Act X of 1877 means a Court which has jurisdiction over the matter in the subsequent suit in which the decision is used as conclusive or in other words, a Court of concurrent jurisdiction ' The rule may be stated to be that the judgment in the proviously decided suit must have been delivered either by a Court of exclusive or of concurrent jurisdiction upon a matter falling within such juris diction, and where the jurisdiction is concurrent the Court which adjudicated on the previously decided suit must have been such a Court as would have heen competent to adjudicate upon the later suit. The question of whether any particular judgment is passed in the exercise of exclusive or concurrent or limited juri diction must depend upon the terms of the law upon which the judg ment relies for its authority. It has been held that the har of res judicata arises where the Court deciding the first suit was competent to try the same and its inability to entertain it arose not from incompetence, but from the existence of mother Court with a preferential jurisdiction (2)

It has also been held that "competent to try" means "competent to try with conclusive effect: '(1) and that concurrence of juri diction must exist not only as to the original Court, but also as to the appellate tribunals and their powers in the respective suits (2) The Cilcutt's High Court, and later decisions in the Madras High Court, have, however, dissented from this view, holding that there was nothing in sect 12 of the last Code to indicate that the judgments in two suits must be open to appeal in the same way, in order that the decision upon any issue in the earlier suit can bur the tital of the saine issue in the later one So it was held that the decision of an issue in a suit in which no second appeal has to the High Court bars the trial of the same issue in a subsequent suit in which such second appeal is allowed (3). And see now the new Explanation If which is intended to affirm the view that the competence of the jurisdiction of a Court does not depend on the right of appeal from its decision. The word "competent" is further to be considered with reference to the time when the suit is brought, and the jurisdiction of the Court at that period. The words of the section must be taken to mean competent to try the subsequent suit if it had been brought at the same time that the former suit was brought (1) A plaintiff cannot, however, ovado the provisions of the Code by joining several causes of action against the same defendant in the sub equent suit and instituting it in a Court of superior jurisdiction (5) In a recent case in the Bombay High Court, where the defendant in a suit for restitution of conjugal rights pleaded res judicata on the ground that plaintiff had filed a previous suit, though this had been disnussed for want of jurisdiction because the leave necessary under clause 12 of the Letters Patent had not first been obtained, it was held on second appeal that the former Court had not been "competent to try ' and that there was no res judicata (6)

The prevailing view as to the effect of an appealable decision is that it constitutes res judicata until appealed against, when it causes to be such, oud does not so operate again unless it is adopted by, and thus becomes the decision of, the Appellate Court (7) Where there were decrees in cross suits on the same facts, and an appeal against one decree only, it was held that the decree unappealed was no bar to the decision of the appeal (1) In a suit brought in the Agency Court at Kattiawar, relating to the villages in Katti awar, the Court decided that there existed between the parties a custom of metap (i c , right to an extra share by the senior member) A second suit was subsequently brought in a British Court as regards the villages belonging to the parties situate in the British territories, wherein plaintiffs alleged that the custom of metap did not exist in their family It was contended, on behalf of the defendant, that the question was res judicata, on the ground that the test of competency to try the subsequent suit was whether the suit was one which in respect of its subject matter and the valuation thereof could have been tried by the Agency Court, and that its exclusion on territorial grounds had not to be taken into account The High Court declined to accept the contention, as not being consistent with the express terms of sect 11 of the Code (2) There can be no res judicata unless the Judge who made the decree in the previous suit had jurisdiction to try and decide, not only the particular matter in issue, but also the subsequent suit itself, in which the issue is subse quently raised (3)

In respect of the presumption as to jurisdiction the rule is, that nothing shall be intended to be out of the jurisdiction of a superior Court, but that which specially appears to be so, and, on the contrary, nothing shall be intended to be within the jurisdiction of an inferior Court, but that which is so expressly alleged (10) It is necessary, therefore, for a party, who relies upon the decision

ments of sect 11 Where in a former suit between the same parties in which the same claim upon title was made, a decree dismissed the suit, but the judgment in the former suit stated that it was left open to the plaintiff to sue again and that no matters affecting the rights of the parties were decided between them. it was held that the prior decree was not a final decision within the meaning of the Code and the defence of res redicate was not maintained (1) Where though there has been a decision on other points, the matter of the second sout has literally not been determined in the previous suit, there can be as to it no res sudicata (2). The section does not apply where the former soit is withdrawn (3) It has already been remarked that upon appeal a matter ceases to be res sudicata. When a matter although decided by the Court of first instance or by the lower Appellate Court, is not decided by the last Court of Appeal, it has not been heard and finally decided. The fact of an appeal being in point of form dismissed is not conclusive as to every point decided by the lower Court (1) As to the effect of withdrawal from a suit, see note below (5) The dismissal of a claim after issue has been teined, because the plaintiff has failed to produce evidence to substantiate it, has the same effect as a diemissal founded upon evidence and the subject matter of such claim will be res judicata (6) A subsisting judgment on an award is as hinding as any other judgment (7) As between the parties a decree arrived at after the taking of an eath on a question of fact in a case under the Oaths Act is none the less a final adjudication (8) A judgment by consent is as effective an esteppel between the parties as a judgment whereby the Court exercises its mind on a contested cause (9) And where a Court has heard and determined

SEC 14 the case judicially, and there has been an appeal, which has been withdrawn owing to a compromise entered into by the parties, the original decision becomes a final decision and operates as a bar to a second suit (1) When a decree is passed by consent of parties, the question whether or not the compromise on which such decree is based is valid, cannot be gone into on an appeal against that decree (2) The Court, bowever, has jurisdiction to set aside a consent order upon any ground which would invalidate an agreement between the parties Se a consent order which had been completed and acted upon but without affecting interests of third parties, was set aside by the Court on the ground of common mistake (3) The test for determining whether there is an estoppel in any particular case is whether the parties decided for themselves the particular matter in dispute and the matter was expressly embodied in the decree passed on the compromise (1) Compromises of suits by Hindu females are to be dealt with upon the principles applicable to alienations by them (5) The rulings as to the effect of ex parte and unexecuted decrees in subsequent suits (a question which has been considered principally in connection with rent suits) are conflicting (6) An ex parte decree is, when final, res judicata only so far as the decision necessarily decided an issue, but nothing more is concluded The conclusive effect is confined to the point actually decided (7) Thus an ex marte decree for cent concludes nothing more than that so much rent was due it a certain time from the tenant to his landlord, and assuming that the plaint goes no further, and makes no claim for a declaration as to the rate of the cent, the defendant having a proper opportunity to meet the case, the sate of sent is not res judicata, even although the decree may recite or declare

A defendant respondent cannot avoid the application of the principle of res audicata, by saving that he did not appear at the trial of the sut, and a plaintiff who has got an ex parte decree on proof of his title or on failure of the defendant to prove a defence the onus of proving which was on him, cannot be deprived of the full benefit of the decree which he has obtained by the fact that the defendant did not amount in court to protect his own interest (2) An ex parte decres in a suit for rent operates as res audicata upon the question of relation of landlord and tenant (3) A finding on an issue not necessary for the determination of the suit will not effect a res sudscata Where an issue is not necessary for the decision of the sunt in which it is raised, the decree, couched in general terms does not cover the finding on that issue, nor can the insertion of such finding in the decree give it the force of res sudicata. The Code does not contemplate findings on issues heing inserted in it, and there is no section in the Code which makes it necessary to appeal from the decree, because such finding has been inserted in it (4) A decree in a maintenance suit is not final in the sense that the rate fixed can never he altered Altered circumstances may justify a suit for reduction of maintenance or a suit for its increase. If there be such altered circumstances a previous decision will be no har (5) An order of the Small Cause Court. made in a proceeding under sect 278 of the former Code, is an order made in a suit within the meaning of sect 37 of the Presidency Small Cause Courts Act (XV of 1882), and as such is final (6) A possessory suit filed in the Mamlatdar's Court was dismissed by the Mamlatdar on the merits The plaintiff there upon filed another suit under sect 9 of the Specific Relief Act in a Civil Court which allowed the claim and passed a decree in his favour It being contended that the Mamlatdar's decree barred the second suit it was held that the Mamlatdar's decision was not conclusive (7) Where there are conflicting decisions, the last decision operates as a har (8)

of clause (a) and the omission altogether of the last clause of the former section as to which, see post A foreign judgment is a judgment of a foreign Court, as to the meaning of which term, see notes to sect 2, ante, and ante "Court' A foreign indement may be used in two ways. It may be either pleaded by a defendant as res judicata by way of defence to the claim made against him, or a suit may be brought to enforce it Seets 13 and 14 recognize the effect of a foreign indigment as res judicata, the latter section providing that where a foreign indgment is relied on the production of the document duly anthenti cated is presumptive evidence that the Court which made it had competent nurisdiction

All indements, whether domestic or foleign if delivered by a Court without jurisdiction are void (1) As regards competency, a question arose as to the meaning of the words "Court of jurisdiction competent to try such subsequent suit" in connection with foreign judgments. In the case of domestic indgments these words as has been already stated mean a Court having con current jurisdiction with the Court trying the subsequent sint whether as regards the pecuniary limit of its jurisdiction or the subject matter of the snit, to try it with conclusive effect (2) The same construction has been given also with regard to foreign judgments it being held that the mere fact that the actual (second) suit could not have been tried in the first Court did not matter, it heing enough if a suit of that class could have been tried if the subject matter of it had been within the local hmits of that Court's juris diction (3) So it has been held that the determination of an issue as to adoption in a smt brought in the Court of a Native State for the recovers of land was conclusive on that question in a suit brought in a British Indian Court for the recovery of property in British territory (4) It has however been donkted whether this decision is correct in so far as it holds that exclusion on territorial grounds is not to be taken into account, it heing pointed out, with reference to the contention that otherwise Explanation VII of the former Code (now sect 14) would be deprived of all meaning, that there are many snits which are within the jurisdiction both of a foreign and domestic Court, to which that Explanation would attach () The existence of juris diction will primarily be determined with reference to the law of the country in which that Court may be situate and from the Covernment whereof it may derive its judicial power (6) The Courts of other countries however are not bound and generally not inclined to recognize the jurisdiction as sufficient when it is conferred or exercised against the general principles of international

last (I) So me the under mentioned exect the was held that the Brieda Court had no turns betton over the defendants who were Buttah subjects residing in British territors

The Inlian Levelsture, however, while recognizing foreign indements is the military, did not adont the view of the English Courts as to their absolute conclusivences, (3) and qualified the general rule enacted in sect. 11 by a number of huntations embedied in sect. 13. Res sudicata in connection with foreign sudements, is only of hunted extent. Jurisdiction and the existence of the other elements common to both domestic and foreign judgments were formerly both dealt with in sect. 11, but mirediction is now separately provided for in sect 13 (a)

The other special limitations prescribed by sect. 13 in order that a foreign judgment may operate is res judicula, are-

1. It must have been given on the ments. So a sudement of dismissal of a suit, as harred by limitation will not be deemed to be on the ments and therefore to operate us res judicata, except where that law not only bars the remedy but extinguishes the right itself (1)

2 There must be no apparent mistake of International or Indian law (5) In the under mentioned case (6) the Court rehed on this clause in support of the view that the judgment of a Court having jurisdiction otherwise than in secordance with the general principles of International law would not be res judicate, but this clause has reference to the judgment itself and not to the question of inrisdiction, which is provided for in clause (a) and which must be dealt with on general principles. As appears from the words used, a mistake of fact does not but the operation of res nudicate, the indement being a bar even though the foreign Court had come on the evidence to an erroneous conclusion as to the facts Nor will a mistake as to the law of the country in which the indement is passed, or of any country other than British India, affect the operation of the judgment as res judicata (7)

3 It must not be contrary to natural justice. It is never advisable to limit the meaning of wide terms intentionally used by the Legislature The words are wide enough, it has been said, to allow of an investigation into the moral rightness of the decision, (8) though they would not permit the Court to inquire into the merits on the simple ground that the conclusion drawn from the facts was erroncous. For such a case assumes a mere error in decision and not a contrariety to natural justice. The scope of the term has, however, as a matter of general practice, been restricted to narrower limits, being used in reference rather to the conduct or mode of procedure of the foreign Court has to the ments of the particular case (1) Thus a decision passed without reason able notice to the persons concerned is contrary to natural justice (2) This view is adopted by the amendment, that it is the proceedings leading to the judgment which are to be looked at 4 The judgment must not have been obtained by fraud All judgments whether domestic or foreign, are void if obtained by fraud or collision(3). In the case of domestic judgments it has sometimes been held that the fraud for which they may be set aside must be extrusive to the matter tried in the cause and not merely that consisting in false evidence or forged documents submitted to the Court (4). The rule has been held to apply to foreign judgments also (5). As regards these judgments, however, the weight of opinion appears to be in favour of the contrary view (6).

5 It must not sustain a claim founded on a breach of any law in force in British India. If so, the judgment will not be enforced, even though the defect be not apparent on the face of the proceedings (7). This clause refuses recognition to every foreign judgment which recognizes a legal relation condemned in this country. But it has been held that a domestic judgment is res judicate even when its effect is to sanction what is illegal in the sense of being prohibited by Statute (8).

Foreign judgments in rem stand on a footing somewhat different from that of domestic judgments in rem as well as from that of foreign judgments in personam. Their recognition and enforcement is still void of express legis lative sanetion, as while they are beyond the rule of res judicate enumenated in these sections, there is nothing in sect. 41 of the Evidence Act to directly indicate that its provisions relating to judgments in rem are to be construed so as to include foreign judgments. But it is apprehended that in analogy with the practice of the English Courts such judgments given in the exercise of probate, matrimonial, admiralty, or insolvency junisdiction will, speaking generally, receive in India the same recognition as is afforded to domestic judgments of the same character (9). While as in the case of other judgments they are no less binding because erroneous, foreign judgments in rem are generally open to the same objectious as those in personam, such as want of jurisdiction,

While the rules applicable to the class of cases where the defendant sets up a foreign judgment by way of defence are contained in sect 13, yet apart from the amendment of that section, introduced by sect 5 of Act VII of 1888, no statutory provision existed with reference to suits brought to enforce foreign judgments. That amendment, however, recognized the previously existing right to bring a suit on a foreign judgment, and in fact such judgments have heen frequently enforced by suit in this country, heing considered to impose a duty or obligation which the Courts are bound to give effect to (2). In respect of the latter class of suits, the general rules are that the judgment must he an adjudication upon the actual merits, (3) final and conclusive, (4) and may be impenched upon the ground that the Court was without jurisdiction to try the case, (5) or that the defendant had not been summoned, and had had no opportunity of making a defence, (6) or on the ground of fraud (7) in the judgment (1) It may, in fact, be generally said that whatever objections are declared by the Legislature to be admissible against a foreign judgment produced by a defendant in bar to an action are equally admissible against a foreign judgment produced by a plaintiff either to found or support an action (2) There is, however, a distinction between a case in which a defendant puts forward a foreign judgment as a har to a sut under sect 11, and a case in which a plaintiff seeks to enforce a foreign judgment In the former it may fairly be supposed that the parties submitted to the jurisdiction of the foreign Court (3) Jurisdiction being properly territorial and attaching, with certain restrictions, upon every person permanently or temporarily resident within the territory, does not follow a foreigner, after his withdrawal thence, living in another State As to land within the territory, jurisdiction always exists, and may exist, over moveables within it, and exists in questions of status, or succession, governed by domicile But no territorial legislation can give jurisdiction, which a Court of a foreign State ought to recognize, over an absent foreigner owning no allegiance to the State so legislating. In a personal action, to which none of the above cases of jurisdiction apply, a deerce pronounced by a Court of a foreign State in absentem the latter not having submitted himself to its authority, is by international law a nullity Not to the Courts of the State in which the cause of action has arisen, not in cases of contract to those of the locus solutionss, should resort be had by the plaintiff, but to the Courts of the State in which the defendant resides, the Courts of the latter State having jurisdiction in all personal actions (4) Though, as a general rule, a Court can exercise jurisdiction over a foreigner only if he is resident within the limits of its territorial jurisdiction, and though natives of British India are foreigners, yet they own allegiance to the common Sovereign of England and British India, and are subject to the supreme legislative authority in the British Empire If, therefore, the supreme Legislature in the British Empire authorizes an English Court in any class of cases to exercise jurisdiction over a non resident foreigner by reason of the cause of action arising within its jurisdiction, and the foreigner is a native of British India he cannot treat the judgment passed as a nullity, merely because he did not reside within the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it Order XI r 1 (e), under the English Judicature Act, constitutes a Legislative Act of the sovereign power regulating the jurisdiction in the case of a British subject resident in British India and outside the ordinary territorial jurisdiction of the English Courts, and gives the latter jurisdiction over such British subjects, assuming that the particular ease falls within the order But it is open to a defendant to show that this is uot so, and that the Enghsh Court had in fact no junisdiction (1) It is not sufficient ground for impugning the judgment of a foreign Court, which ordinarily proceeds in accordance with the recognized principles of judicial investigation, to show that in the particular instance its procedure may have been irregular. It may he assumed that the procedure was regular, but if there was irregularity, it would not he sufficient ground for refusing respect to the judgment (2)

On the other hand, as has been already observed, the general rule is that a Court which entertains a suit on a foreign judgment cannot institute an inquiry into the ments of the enginal action or the propriety of the decision (3). This rule, however, was in the last Code abrogated with reference to the judgments of certain fercian Courts in Asia and Africa by the enactment in sect 5 of Act VII. of 1888, amending seet 13 of the Code, and which enactment was passed with reference to the arguments urged by the Bombay High Court (1) for distinguishing the judgments of the Courts of native States from those of other foreign Courts. So where a smt was brought in a Court in British India upen the basis of a decree of the Council of Regency of the State of Rampur. it was held that the Court was empowered by sect 14 (corresponding with sect 13) of the Code of Civil Procedure, as amended by Act VII of 1888, to consider the ments of the case in which the deerec of the Council of Regency had been passed (5) It was held in effect by the Madras High Court that this amendment did not alter the general rule already mentioned, except hy vesting in the Court a judicial discretion to inquire into the merits of any case in which it appeared that ne confidence was to be repesed in the jud_nuent of a fereign Court, being one of those which are mentioued in the amended section. A party to an action on such a judgment had not a right to have the case reheard All that the section said was that the Judge was not to be precluded from inquiry into the merits (6) The last paragraph of the corresponding section in the last Code has been now omitted, and no distinction now exist between the judgments of Asiatic and African Courts and other foreign Courts Where a decree is obtained upon a foreign judgment it is to be executed according to the provisions of the Code (1). The judgment of a foreign Court obtained on a decree of a Court in British India is no bar to the execution of the original decree (2). Seet 112 provides for the execution of decrees of Courts established by the Government of India in Native States, and seet 113 allows of the execution in particular instances, upon the permission of the Governor in Council of the decrees of other Native Courts as if they had been made by the Courts in British India.

It is a well recognized principle that erimes, including in that term all breaches of public law punishable by peeumary mulet or otherwise, at the instance of State Govennment, or of some one representing the public, are local in this sense, that they are only cognizable and punishable in the country where they were committed. Accordingly, no proceeding, even in the shape of a civil suit, which has for its object the enforcement by the State, whether directly or indirectly, of punishment imposed for such breaches by the lex fori, ought to be admitted in the Courts of any other country (3)

Interlocutory orders and orders in execution proceedings -Sect 11 is not exhaustive of the effects of the principle of res judicata (4) These orders, if not appealed from, are binding upon the parties in all subsequent proceedings in the same suit Though seet 11 of the Code does not in terms apply to these orders, yet the principle which underhes it is equally applicable to them as to regular suits The Privy Council, speaking of such an order, held that, "It was as hinding between the parties and those claiming under them as an interlocutory judgment in a suit is binding upon the parties in ovory proceeding in that suit, or as a final judgment in a suit is hinding upon them in earrying the judgment into execution. The hinding force of such 1 judgment depends, not upon seet 13 of Act X of 1877, but upon general principles of law If it were not binding there would be ue end to higation "(5) The principle of res judicata applies to prevent parties raising a second timo in the same suit, or in the same execution proceedings, an issue which, in that suit or ou the execution proceedings in that suit, had been pre viously determined (6) Orders in execution proceedings, if not appealed from

re hinding upon the parties to the suit in all subsequent proceedings in that uit, on principles analogous to these of res sudicata strictly so called herefore, necessary to constitute a har that there should be a hearing and inal decision Where an application for execution is allowed to he withdrawn, he matters in dispute are not heard and decided There is, therefore, no res udicata (1) Though a deerce does not in terms give a certain rehef, yet if t is construed in orders passed upon it as having given that rehef, it is not ompetent to the Court on a subsequent application to treat those orders as proneous and put another construction on the decree (2) Seet 47 differs from sect 11 m this respect, that the latter section hars not only the trial of a out or issue, where the suit or issue had been previously heard and determined, but also the trial of an issue which should have been raised in a previous suit by either party When an issue arising out of the execution of a decree has not been raised and determined under sect 47, there is nothing in that section to prevent a defendant, in a separate suit subsequently brought, from raising that issue in that suit (3) For a case where a previous application for execution was refused and judgment debtor's objection as to limitation disallowed, and as to the effect of such an order in a subsequent application for execution, see below (4) A judgment debtor cannot question the right of a decree holder te apply for execution when execution has been on previous occasions applied for by the latter, and grauted by the executing Court (5) In the under mentioned case,(6) it was held that though the analogy furnished by seet 11 could not be altogether left out of sight in the application there dealt with, yet the Court ought to facilitate inquiries which are necessary for the purposo of carrying out decrees passed by it, and to accept with readiness any information which shows that the litigants have disregarded any part of the Court's decree It would be wrong to dismiss an application made with the above purpose, simply because the applicant may have made the same endeavour without success in another proceeding

A witness in a proceeding under sect 115 of the Criminal Procedure Code had asked for his costs in the Magistrate's Court hut had been refused and was referred to a civil suit On his bringing such suit it was held that there was no adjudication, no issues, no contesting parties, and that therefore the principle of

res judicata did not apply (7)

In a suit for probate, the caveators assailed the whole of the will on the ground of undue influence, but the probate Court granted probate disallowing the objection. PLACE OF SUING.

15 Every suit shall be instituted in the Court of the lowest courtin which suits grade competent to try it.

"Shall be instituted"-There is no provision either in the various Civil Court Acts or in the Code prescribing a minimum jurisdiction as there is prescribing a maximum jurisdiction. A superior Court is by this section forbidden from trying a suit cognizable by an inferior Court, not on account of any inhorent incompetency to try it, but on grounds of public convenience and economy It has been thought that this section prescribed a minimum limit of jurisdiction, and that, for instance, a Subordinate Judge would have no jurisdiction to try a suit which, owing to its value, was triable by a Munsif But it has been held that this section refers to procedure only, and regulates the practice of the Courts, but does not deprive any Court of jurisdiction which it may otherwise possess (2) The section is merely directory, and does not oust the jurisdiction of a Subordinate or District Judge, (3) and the institution of a suit cognizable by a lower Court in a Court of higher jurisdiction is merch in irregularity which does not affect the jurisdiction of the Court (4) or the merits of the case (5) and such as was covered by sect 578 of the former Code (6)

Court —The term "Court of the lowest grade" refers only to Courts to which the Civil Procedure Code is applicable (1) It has been therefore held in Madris that Small Cause Courts had concurrent jurisdiction with Courts of Village Munsifs to hear suits which are convigable by the latter (2)

"Lowest grade "-Throughout the country there are Courts of different grades having jurisdiction in suits of different amounts in certain prescribed local areas The pecuniary jurisdiction must be determined with reference to the various Acts constituting the Courts and the question of the valuation of particular suits, in order to ascertain within the jurisdiction of which Court they fall, by reference to the Court Fees and Valuation Act, and the cases decided thereunder, to which reference has been made in the notes to seet 9. ante, "Pecumary Jurisdiction," Sect. 144 of the Bengal Tenancy Act was held to be controlled by sects 15 and 17 of the former Civil Procedure Code A suit for rent is therefore to he instituted, subject to pecumiary limitations, in the Court of the lowest grade competent to try it (3) Where there were two plaintiffs, one of whom should have sued, if sole plaintiff, in the Subordinate Judge's Court as the Court of lowest grade, and the other could, by reason of the provisions of Act XX of 1863, only sue in the District Court, it was held that as it was competent for the plaintiffs to join this section did not apply so as to prevent the first plaintiff from joining with the second in instituting the suit in the District Court (4)

"Competent to try"-Competency here means jurisdiction The com petency of a Court depends upon the nature or subject matter of a suit, and upon the local and pecuniary extent of the Court's jurisdiction As regards the first certain Courts are Courts of special jurisdiction masmuch as some classes of cases involve disputes with which superior or specially experienced tribunals are particularly familiar, and which can more satisfactorily be disposed of by them such as Revenue, Admiralty, Probate Divorce Patent Insolvency Courts, and the like Further, cases of importance affecting considerable interests or involving questions of intricacy are left to be determined by the higher grade or superior Courts (5) So suits for damages for the infringement of the exclusive privilege to an invention or of a copyright in a design under the Inventions and Designs Act (6) or, for damages for the infringement of the copyright in hooks (7) have been specially made eognizable only by District Courts So suits under seet 92, post, can be instituted only in a High Court or District Court Miscellaneous proceedings unconnected with suits are generally triable outside the Presidency towns by District Courts though sometimes Subordinate Courts are empowered to dispose of them on a reference by the District Court (1) And in Bombay the District Judge can alone take cognizance of suits in which the Government or any officer of Government in his official capacity is a party (2) So in Madras, a suit by a zemindar for the dismissal of a zemindar larnam cannot be entertained by a District Munsif, such suit being cognizable only by a Subordinate or, if none, a District Judge (3) On the other hand, cases of easy settlement and minor importance are relegated to petty tribunals or to special Courts, such as Small Cause Courts or Village Munsifs' Courts See generally as to jurisdiction over the subject matter and persons, the notes to sect 9, ante, and the same also as to locality of jurisdiction which is more particularly dealt with in the next four sections and the notes thereto. The present section has reference mainly to the pecumary jurisdiction of Courts, the limitations of which, in regard to different grades of civil Courts vary in the several provinces of British India. See notes to sect 9 ante.

Explanation.—In this section "property" means property

"Pecuniary or other limitations"-See as to these, notes to seets 9 and 15, ante

Scope of section -This section deals with local or territorial jurisdiction, which in the case of real actions depends on the situation of the property in higherian, and seek 20 deals with personal actions which depend on the place of accrual of the cause of action, or the residence of the defendant. The general rule of local turisdiction, of which this section is an embodiment, is that immoveable property is exclusively subject to the laws and jurisdiction of the Courts of the country in which it is situate. It follows from this that no other laws or Courts can affect it As expressly stated in the Explanation, the Courts of this country have, subject to the proviso, no jurisdiction in respect of immoveable property situate outside British India (1) But all property which has a foreign origin is not always outside the jurisdiction of Courts of this country (2) Where however, a suit was brought in the Court of the Subordinate Judge of Mirzanur for redening tion of lands lying within that district but included in the same mortgage with other lands lying within the family domains of the Maharaiah of Benares it was beld that as the Court had jurisdiction to entertain the suit in respect of the immeveable property in Milzapur, that jurisdiction could not be ousted hecause in the course of the trial of the suit it became necessary incidentally to decide, for the purposes of the suit, questions relating to mortgaged property held by the defendants outside the jurisdiction in order to determine whether the plaintiff bad a right to recover the mortgaged property situated in Mirzapur (3)

This section does not apply to the original civil jurisdiction of the Presidency High Courts which are governed by clause 12 of the Letters Patent, which empowers them to try suits for land or other immoveable property if such land or property shall be satuated either wholly or in case the leave (i) of the Court shall have been first obtained in part within the

Suits deemed to be for immoveable property -In the case of the High Courts there has been considerable conflict of opinion as to the essentials of umsdietion, for which provision has been made by the Charters, to avoid which in regard to the practice of the Mofussil Courts the section contains detailed provisions as to local inrisdiction. The High Courts have ordinarily no purisdiction to try suits relating to unproveable property, where such property is wholly situate without the local hours of then original invisdiction (5) and it would appear to be doubtful whether the Equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts in India is of the same extent as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery, namely to take cognizance of any courty between persons residing within the jurisdiction respecting lands ontside it (6) Moreover, the present tendency, even in the case of English Courts, is to abstain from interfering in personam where the matter concerns land outside their jurisdiction (7) It is generally agreed that a suit for partition of immoveable property is a suit for immoveable property (8) So also is any suit seeking delivery to the plaintiff of land or other immoveable property. The Bombay High Court formerly appeared to take a view which would restrict the words "suits for land or other immorcable monerty ' to suits of the last mentioned character (9) The other High Courts have held that that expression includes suits other than those for the possession of land . in fact, every suit in which a decree is asked for operating directly on the land such as to enforce a security upon it for forcelosure or redemption Thus the decisions were conflicting upon the point whether such Courts are empowered to entertain suits for foreclosing or sale or redemption of property beyond their local jurisdiction, (10) or for

Suits deemed to be for immoveable property.-In the case of the High Courts there has been considerable conflict of ommon as to the essentials of jurisdiction for which provision has been made by the Charters, to avoid which in regard to the practice of the Mofussil Courts the section contains detailed provisions as to local jurisdiction. The High Courts have ordinarily no jurisdiction to try suits relating to immoveable property, where such property 18 wholly situate without the local lumits of their original purisdiction (5) and it would appear to be doubtful whether the Equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts in India is of the same extent as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery, namely to take cognizance of any courty between persons residing within the jurisdiction respecting lands outside it (6) Moreover, the present tendency, even in the case of English Courts is to abstain from interfering in personam where the matter concerns land outside their jurisdiction (7) It is generally agreed that a suit for partition of immovcable property is a suit for immoveable property (8) So also is any suit seeking delivery to the plaintiff of land or other immoveable property High Court formerly appeared to take a view which would restrict the words "suits for land or other immoreable property' to suits of the last mentioned character (9) The other High Courts have held that that expression includes suits other than those for the possession of land in fact, every suit in which a decree is asked for operating directly on the land such as to enforce a security upon it for foreclosure or redemption Thus the decisions were conflicting upon the point whether such Courts are empowered to entertain suits for foreclosure or sale or redemption of property beyond their local jurisdiction. specific performance of contracts relating to land similarly situated (1). In L. e. recent cases the Bombay High Court has also taken the broader view (2) Inthe Madras High Court, it was held that a " suit for laid" ircludes any aut in which a decree is asked for operating directly upon the land (3) and therefore includes any suit brought to enforce a security upon land, such as a suffire sale of land equitably mortgaged by deposit of title decids. Moore, J , ta ze that the pre ent section of the Code was simply an amplification with differ the old section of the Act of 1859, on which clause 12 of the Letters Patent Wait appears, based, ob erved that he was prepared to go further, and to kell that the phra e " suit for laid or other im roscable , roserts, as used in the Letters Patent, includes all suits mentioned in clauses (a) to (f) of this ect the If the property is situate out ide the juri-diction, the High Court cannot take cognizance of it, even if moveable property within the jury diction is also classed in it, as clause 12 does not quably the expression "in sur's for last," etc. with the word only, and the words "all other cases" are not to be uninted as including cases of suits for immoveable plus moveable property but the in which immoveable property is not involved (4) It is, homever remember admitted that every suit having any reference to immoveable property as not a suit for immoveable property (5). It has been held that a me to recover title deeds of certain land out ide the local builts, even thoughts with the question of title to that land, is not a suit to obtain poses, on cr, or dad in ny way with, land and is therefore cognizable by the High Court, (i) but this is a been disputed (2). So also where in a suit by a landlord for rent no relief is claimed in respect of the land, but it becomes necessary to determine what he nature of the tenancy was, that question does not make the suit on "for an I" (3). The High Court has also taken cognizance of an application to file in award which provided for the dissolution of a partnership in lands outside holocal limits, and also that the defendant is share in the property should stand harged with the payment of a certain fund to be due by him to the plaintiff, and that the defendant should execute a mortgage of his share to the plaintiff is security for such payment, and that the tea garden at Darphing should be old in Calcutta (4).

The general Launtable pure-diction of the High Court on the original side shich it has inherited from the supreme Court, which in its turn administered he Chancery Rules, must also be considered (ude post) So the Courts of quity will exercise their powers in personam in the case of trustees and others endent within their purishetion, to oblice such persons to perform trusts, to ATTY OUT CONTracts and to obey the rules of Laurty even where the subjectnatter of the trust or contract or equity may be land situate out of their juris betton (5) Again there is the Laustable surrediction by grant of an impraction r appointment of a receiver I has a suit for damaces to certain immoveable roperty by a nursance caused on it and for an injunction to restrain the nursance, ias been held to be a suit not for unmoveable property, but exclusively in ersonam (6) Simularly, a suit by some of the trustees of an endowment of ertain lands against their co trustees in possession, for a declaration of plaintiff s itle to be shebails jointly with the defendants for the settlement of a scheme or the performance of the worship, for the appointment of a receiver, for an ajunction to restrain the defendants from interfering with the property, and or an account, 15 not a suit for those lands (7)

(7) Juggodumba t Puddomoney, 15 B L. The Courts have thus compulled the performance of contracts and trusts, which were not either locally or ratione domicility within their jurisdiction (3) But in this country the power to make orders in personam, though the subject matter of the snit is without the jurisdiction, which jurisdiction exists both 14 the case of the High Courts and the Provincial Courts, ninst he considered with reference to the limitations on immsdiction imposed in the case of the former by the Letters Patent, and in the ease of the latter by the provisions of this section In the case of the High Courts, regard must be had to the roal object of the smt and to what are the rights and intentions of the respective parties, and those eases which are founded upon the principle laid down in Penn v Baltimore must be distinguished from those which depend not so much upon the jurisdiction generally exercised by Courts of Equity, as upon the question whether the suit is substantially one within the statutory junisdiction conferred upon the Courts (4) So when a smt which, though in form one brought for an injunction or rehef obtained through personal obedience, is in substance a suit " for land," which land is situate without the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court, the latter has no power to grant the rehef prayed (3) The Equitable jurisdiction of the High Courts is not as extensive as that which has been claimed by the Court of Chancery (6) Though the Courts here are governed by the same principles as those which are acted upon hy Courts of Equity in England, this is only so far as such principles are not at variance with express legislative enactment (7)

made in respect of the property in suit rather than the actual situation of the latter. If the suit is not by reason of its substantial character and the provisions of the Charters, within the cognizance of the Court, the latter is unable to grant relief. But where the relief sought is purely in personam and not in rom the Courts are empowered to make a decree which shall be of the same character (1)

The same rule applies in the case of Courts other than the Presidency High Courts, but in this case the provisions of this section must be considered Under it, such Courts may exercise a purisdiction in personan, but the jurisdiction seems to be of a more functed extent. Not only are they expressly deprived of power to entertain suits for forcefosure, sale or redemption, but the limitations imposed by clause (d) are in terms extensive, and the provise determining their powers to act in personan limits the exercise of such powers to cases where the property is leful by or on behalf of the defendant (2) resident within the jurisdiction (3) when the rule foodly can be entirely obtained through his personal obedience, and where the property is situated in British India (3).

grounds upon which jurisdiction is given on account of residence a guide will be found to the true interpretation of the term, and the grounds upon which such jurisdiction is given are the convenience not of the plaintiff but of the defendant and his witnesses, and the advantage which may accrue to the former by enforcing the judgment of the Court within its own jurisdiction (1) These connote a residence of a more or less permanent character

Nextly, even in the case of the same enretment and the same portion of it there can be no fixed rule for all cases. Each case must depend upon its own particular circumstances (2)

It is necessary, in the first place, that the readence be actual and bona fide, and not merely colourable or collusive, for in such case there is no residence at all. Assuming this, it cannot, however, be laid down with precision how long a person must stay in a place, and in what way, so as to be deemed to reside there. A very short period of actual living has been held sufficient in some cases (3). This if may be considered those cases where a man has no permanent residence. Great stress is laid in the cases on the fact as to whether or not the person said to reside within the jurisdiction had at the time any other residence elsewhere (4). When a man has no permanent residence he must be taken to dwell where he is actually staying (5). So in such cases a stay of a month was held sufficient in the case of a man who had no other residence, (6) the stay of a ship's captain in port, (7) and even ten days (8).

The other case is that in which a person has a permanent residence else where A person may, however, dwell or reside at more places than one (9) But in order to afford foundation for jurisdiction the residences must be of a permanent character and be visited from time to time (10). When the defeu dant has a fixed and permanent residence elsewhere, to give jurisdiction on the ground of residence, something more than a temporary stay within the local limits of the Court is required (11). So a temporary residence of time days, (12) a residence for the temporary purpose of attending a trial of a suit in which the party was a defendant, (13) staying in a place with a definite object or fixed purpose for a short and limited period,(1) will not, in the case of a man who has a bond fide and permanent abode elsewhere, give jurisdiction. So where an officer attached to a regiment at Vellore went on medical leave to Madras, where he resided in a rented house and finally returned to Vellore, the latter was held to he the place where he dwelt (2)

In conclusion, it may be said that while neither "dwell" nor "reside" necessarily implies a permanent state of things, (3) yet when it is desired to speak of residence for a limited time a limiting adjective is applied, and when there is no such qualifying adjective permanent residence is understood (4). The residence contemplated by the Letters Patent, (5) and (subject to Explanation I) the Code, must be of a more or less permanent character, of such a nature as to show that the Court in which a defendant is sued is his natural forum (6). The Court will not snatch a jurisdiction which was not intended to be conferred (7). As regards Explanation I, wide post. Sect. 265 of the Contract Act is permissive and does not prohibit a suit elsewhere than at the place where the partnership was carried on, if a sufficient ground of jurisdiction exists (8).

Explanation I —The term residence is hero applied to the temporary residence of a defendant in respect of a cause of action arising at the place where he has such temporary residence. That is an enlarging explanation for a limited purpose, and not an interpretation or definition of the word as the such that the small Cause Courts Act, XI of 1865 (10) In respect of any cause of action arising at the place of permanent dwelling, he must be sued there (11) The change in the Explanation appears to be of a verhal character

Explanation II .- This is in general conformity with the Eu_lish decisions, though under the Indian rule the carrying on of husiness is not only a circumstance for determining the residence of a company, but an independent ground of jurisdiction also (1) The Secretary of State in Council is not a body corporate, though he may be used as such (2) Foreign corporations or companies have their domicile in the country where they are incorporated, and thus come into existence But they may also be deemed to reside in the country in which they have their seat and principal place of business (3)

"Carries on business."-This phrase is of varying import, and must be interpreted according to the context and the apparent purpose of the Legisla ture (1) In the first place this expression here connotes more than being busy or doing husiness merely, and more than mere service, employment, or occupa A man who busics him elf about science or politics, though he may have a great deal of husiness to transact in respect of these matters, does not "carry on business", nor does a domestic servant, a clerk, or assistant in a trading or mercantile concern. The words mean the carrying on of business by the person whose husiness it is, and mean to describe a person managing or conducting his own, and not somebody else's, husiness. He must either manage or conduct a business of his own, or the husiness which is managed or conducted for him must be his own The servant or employee is not carry ing on his own business, but his master's A person carries on husiness when he controls or directs it (5)

The term "business" is not limited to commercial business. So where a person was in daily attendance on his patients as surgeon, anothecary, and acconcheur within a certain district, ho was held to he carrying on business there (6) It has, however, been held that zemindary business is not within the rule, (7) nor the receipts of presents or offerings (8) There is a conflict of opinion as to whether the Government can (9) or cannot (10) be said to carry on business

In the under mentioned case (1) the Court of first instance, whose judgment was reversed on appeal (2) hell that the earrying on of business must involve pretty much the same element of permanency as a necessary to convert a nere "staying" into "dwelling." But it does not seem to be necessary that the business should be carried on permanently, and each case must be decided on its own facts (3). Thus a person who had no regular office, but went once or twee a week from the Mofussal to a friend's house in Calcutt, and saw people there on business, and contracted there with some man for the hire of cargo-boats, was held to carry on business or personally work for gain at Calcutta (4).

The husiness need not be one extrict on personally (5). This is shown by the emission of the term "personally" before the words "carry on business," and its introduction before the words "work for gain". The defendant must, however, carry on some independent rigular business in person, of at an office or other fixed place of business, either personally or by clerks or servants employed by the defendant and conducting the business under his control, and in his individual or partner-hip name (6). So in the last mentioned case it was held that the defendant had no place of business in Madras the sales being effected by another person. X in his independent business or trade of a general broker for a commission received from the purchasers. In such case it was X and not the defendant who was carrying on business in Madras.

A person may carry on business at the same time at several places by means of different agents as it often really the case. The employment how ever, of a person as one's commission agent, or simply consigning goods to a commission (7) or general (8) agent for sale by him in the exercise of his own calling does not constitute carrying on business at the place where that person or agent may be residing or carrying on his own business or doing or selling what he may have been employed to do or sell. In the under mentioned case (1) it was held that a defendant does not carry on business at a place, though he may have an agent there for certain purposes connected with his business, where that which is the essential ingredient in his business does not take place within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court In delivering judgment, Saus c. CJ, said "To determine whether a defendant is carrying on business, it must first be ascertained what his par ticular trade, calling, or occupation is, and then we can examine whether the facts proved amount to a carrying on of that particular trade, calling or occupa tion within the jurisdiction. The present defendant is admittedly a retail vendor in European goods, and obtains his highhood by the profit which he makes upon his siles, without 'sale' he could not make profit, or, in other words, he could not carry on business for the purpose of gaining a livelihood 'Sale' is an essential in redient in carrying on this defendant's business, and in the present case, to give this Court cognizance of suit upon that ground it must be shown that 'sale' by the defendant in the way of a retail dealer has taken place within our territorial limit. The place of sale, in the present case, is the true place of the defendant's carrying on business to the amendment of the section in 1888. Sometimes these words have been even the restricted sense of mimediate occasion of the action, which itself means the right to have recourse to the Courts, in other and nerhans the greater number of cases, the wider sen e of necessary conditions of its maintenance. In the former sense it is the more matter of fact, the failure of the defendant to do, or forbear from doing, to give or make good, that which the plantul's right entitles him to misst upon-in other words, the infraction of the right, as, in the case of a contract, its breach. In the latter sense it is this matter of fact alus the right re ident in the plaintiff, or, to take the example cho en both the making of the contract and its breach (1) In this list sen c. "can c of action ' therefore means every fact which is material to be proved to entitle the plaintiff to succeed. (2) and everything which, if not proved, gives the defendant an immediate right to judgment, must be part of the cau e of action . (3) though the term does not comprise every piece of evidence which is necessary to prove each fact, but every fact which is necessary to be proved (1) In this view of the case, the cause of action (which must exist at the date of the action (5)) is composed of several parts. which must, of course, neces arily include as one of such parts the infriction (6) of the right claimed

The next question is, whether in order to give jurisdiction the whole cause of action should have air en within the jurisdiction or whether it is sufficient that a part of such cause of action should have so arise. As regards the Presidency High Courts, it is well settled that the term "cause of action," as used in clause 12 of the Charters (which, and not this section, governs such Courts), means the whole cause of action and not a material part of it (7)

though if a part of the cause of action shall have arisen within the purishet a suit will be in the High Court if leave have been proviously obtained. For the purposes of the Letters Patent, the expression 'cause of action means the bundle of facts which it is necessary for the plantiff to prove before he can succeed in his suit. It does not include irrelevant or immaterial facts, but embraces material facts without which the plantiff must fail. If any of these material facts have taken place within the jurisdiction of the Court then leave can be given under clause 12. But if no such material facts have taken place within the jurisdiction of the court then leave can be given under clause 12. But if no such material facts have taken place within the jurisdiction and leave is given there then it is open to the defendant to contend at the hearing that the Court has no jurisdiction (1)

Pror to the amendment of the corresponding section of the last Code in 1888 it was held that the words therein used did not mean the whole cause of action but any material portion of the nature stated in Explanation III to that section which was added in the year mentioned. And therefore the Courts governed by the Code were held to have jurisdiction if such a material portion of the cause of action arose within their jurisdiction (2). Seet 7 Act VII of 1888, gave effect to these decisions by adding the third Explanation to the former section which rendered further discussion in the case of suits arising out of contract unnecessary (wide post). The rule moreover, has been reaffirmed recently to be of general application in all suits (3). And now the section expressly gives jurisdiction where the cause of action wholly or in part arises. No leave is required in the latter case.

Under the Code British Courts are empowered to pass judgment against a non resident foreigner provided that the cause of action has arisen within the jurisdiction of the Court pronouncing the judgment (4) The Court in whose local jurisdiction the funds of an endowment received from a foreign territors are expended by the parties reading there, has full power to determine questions as to the management of the finide quite apart from the title to the grant, which may not be in dispute (1). As to residence, etc., giving jurisdiction in case of foreigners, so post, and as to cases in which the cause of action arrises below law water mark and within three indes of it the case undermentioned (2).

Whatever the cause of action may be the jurisdiction created at the place of its accrual is not affected by the death of the person originally hable, and it is a general principle that the representative of a deceased person may be sued in that Court within the jurisdiction of which the cause of action with the deceased person arose (3). The accrual of a cause of action within the local limits of a Court's jurisdiction will not give the Court jurisdiction over a suit in which any other cause of action arising out of those limits is joined, it being, in fact, a pre requisite of the right to join in one suit more than one cause of action against a defen hant that the Court to which the plaint is presented should have jurisdiction over all the causes of action (1).

The term "cause of action as used in the Code applies to torts as well as contracts (5). Reading clauses (a), (b), and (c) with the words 'energy suit' it appears that all suits of whatever nature subject to the limitations in the preceding sections, are referred to Sect 19 contains special provisions with regard to suits for compensation for wrong done but suits on tort not within the words of that section will fall under this. In India, the cause of action has been always held to furnish the forum not only of suits in contracts but in its broader sense to apply also to suits on torts

As already stated the words 'cause of action in this section do not mean necessarily the whole cause of action but a surt to which the section epplies may be instituted where some portion of the cause of action arises (6). So m a surt praying that a fraudulent compromise and decreo founded thereon might be declared your and for an injunction restreining execution it was held that though the decree was made and compromise entered into in Calcutta (where in respect of them the cause of action arose) yet a material part of the cause of action, naturally the infringement of the plaintiff's right by executing the decree having taken place in Crumpore the suit lay in that district (7).

Though a special provision as to jurisdiction over suits on torts has been made in sect 19, there is nothing in the general words of the present one to exclude them from its operation. The Courts will therefore have jurisdiction

when the cause of action arises within their jurisdiction or the defendants reside, etc, there And it is not necessary that both the constituents of jurisdiction should exist in British India (1) The previsions of this section are independent of the general principles of international law, but there is nothing even in these principles to restrict the jurisdiction of the Courts of any country to cases in which the cruso of action should have rusen in that country. In England it is settled that an action will be there against a defendant there upon a trans action in a place in another country (2) Explanation III to the former section had no reference to torts But the term "cause of action" was, under the last Codo, independently of that explanation, construed to mean not the whole cause of action—if such cause of action involves more than the mere commission of the delict-in suits to which the Code applies (3) Probably, the cause of action will usually be construed in a restricted sense, so as not to involve the right violated, but to denote only the violation or the breach of a duty which outsitles the plaintiff to relief (1) In any case, a large number of cases in tort will come within the special provisions of the preceding section. In a recent English case dealing with the offect of a judgment in the Calcutta High Court in divorce proceedings coudoniming in damages a defendant, a British eubject, who though formerly resident in Iudia, had left this country before the potition was assued, and was now domicaled in England, it was argued on his behalf that the Calcutta High Court had ne jurisdiction over him, but it was held that the power to give damages was ancillary to the judgment on status concerning the marriage, which judgment, being in rem, would bind the world (5)

A Court may entertain a cust to set aside a decree on the ground of fraud provided that the requirements of this section or of the Charter, as the case may be, are satisfied (6) In the case of a libel, the suit will be where it has boen published (7) In a suit to get aside a release executed in Calcutta of the plaintiff's interest in certain property in Bombay it was held that the cause of action included the effect of the release on the property in Bombay, and did not wholly arise in Calcutta (8) This section, in the case of suits between

Explanation III. of former section -This has been omitted, as its relation was considered unnecessary owing to the addition made to sub clause (c) of the words "whelly or in part" in reference to the cause of action Though omitted the Explanation gave a correct statement of what is still the law (4) and is therefore hero dealt with This Explanation settled the signification of the term "cause of action" in the case of suits arising out of contract. Its language was wide enough to include all eases of contract, though not obhermon in the nature of quasi contracts,(5) though it is said (6) that the corresponding rule of locus solutionis in other countries does not apply to contracts already executed or creating personal status Certain relations, such as those of marriago and adoption, though originally based on contract, are not themselves sources of rights and duties on account of the grounds of contract (7) While a suit may be arising out of contract within the meaning of the Explanation, it does not follow that all the clauses of that section will be applicable to it, as in the case of a suit arising out of contract claiming a suni pavable not in performance of the contract, but as damages for its breach (8) It may be a question whether the language of the Explanation is explicit enough to include suits for the can cellation of contract, the forum controctus in Roman law being generally held to apply to actions arising out of the natural development of the obligation, and, therefore, leading to its fulfilment A suit for the cancellation of a contract must, however, always be for some cause, and the nature of the cause and the place of its accrual, and not necessarily the place of the contract, will furnish the forum for such suits (9) But whether it does or not the suit will be within the section

In suits arising out of contract the cause of action is deemed to arise, according to the omitted Explanation, at three places -

(a) The place where the contract was made. The determination of this question belongs to the law of contracts. This will be the place of meeting where there is a personal meeting of the parties—except perhaps, where the validity of a contract is made to depend upon the observance of a particular form, in which case the place at which that form is completed in the true place of the contract, because untilsuch completion no party is bound (10)

"Of any of the parties '—1 person who has received a notice of an application made by a judgment-debtor to be declared an insolvent, and who e name is on the record is in opposing creditor, is a party on whose application a transfer may be made under this section (1) The section permits transfer upon the application of parties as well as of the Court's own motion without such application (2)

"Notice"—The present section, unlike the two previous sections requires notice to be given by the Court and not by the party. Where the order was made without notice having been given to the plaintiffs it was set aside (3). The provision as to notice is one of procedure and practice, and the requirements as to notice may be warved (4).

"At any stage"—These words have been added to the first paragraph to remove the difficulty created by the New that a suit cannot be transferred ifter the hearing has once commenced, as to which there was a conflict of decision boe note, post, "Pendana"

Power of High Court to transfer -Besides the powers conferred by this section, the High Court, under clause 13 of the Letters Patent has power to transfer to itself only when it thinks proper to do so either on the agreement of the parties to that effect or for purposes of justice the reasons for doing so being recorded in the proceedings of the High Court No statement of the grounds on which the Court will act can be exhaustive Transfers That the parties and have been granted on the following grounds witnesses resido in Calcutta, that it would be cheaper to try the suit there, that all parties desired a transfer, (5) that to of the property claimed was in Calcutta, and that it was undesirable that an amin of a Mofussil Court should Partition such property, that the suit might be tried more cheaply and expeditionsly in Calcutta, (6) that difficult questions of law were involved and the conduct of the Judge towards the plaintiff made it impossible that he should be able to deal with the suit with im partiality or freedom from prejudice (7) that the questions involved were of importance or difficulty, the balance of convenience of cheapness of trial, the residence of parties really interested and witnesses either in Calcutta or its immediate neighbourhood the advance of money and presence of books in Calcutta, the defendant's want of means to go herself or take her

It has also been held that the mere fact that it would be less expensive to try the case in the High Court was not sufficient of itself for the Court to act upon and order the case to be transferred, and that to justify transfer it must be shown that the trial in the Court in which the suit had been instituted would be unsatisfactors (2).

The application should be made to a Judge sitting on the original side of the Court (3). The substantive law applicable to the case will be the law of the Court from which it has been transferred (1). The words to remote and try and deterrance in the Letters Patent have a wide signification. They are not limited to any particular period or stage of the sunt, considered as a regular series of steps in procedure. Meet the confinement of a sunt between parties, as long as the proceedings in the Court of first instance are in such a condition that the party is cutified to ask that Court to raise and judicially determine in question material to the first result of the sunt as between himself and the other party, so long is the suit in existence in the first Court and capable of being removed under clause 13 in order that such questions may be determined in the High Court (5).

An order of transfer made by a District Court under this section, transferring a suit in which an appeal would be from a deerce made therem, was held not subject to revision (7) And the principle was considered to apply where a District Judge had trans ferred a suit from a Subordinate Court to his own file, and before his hearing it an application was made to the High Court for its transfer to some other Court (8) The High Court refused in its extraordinary jurisdiction to juterfere, execut under eircumstances of a very special nature, with the discretion of a Judge who had transferred, under the provisions of the last Code execution proceedings under a deereo from one Subordinate Court to another (9) It was held, under the Code of 1859 that where a District Court had jurisdiction to try a suit and the defendant made no application to the Judge or communication

"Transfer or withdraw"-Ihis section, which corresponds with sect 25 of the last Code, is clearly worded to show that it applies both to the transfer and withdrawal of suits, covering also transfers to a Court newly estab lished There is no restriction as to the grounds on which a transfer or withdrawal may be ordered under this section, which applies to the High Court, whose powers under the Letters Patent have already been considered A usual ground is personal disqualification on account of pecuniary of other personal interest of the presiding Judge (2) A transfer has been ordered on the ground that serious questions of law were likely to arise in connection with winding up proceedings, which it would be difficult to discuss in the absence of the necessary authorities, and that the pro ceedings were such that they would ultimately go before the High Court in a variety of appeals from orders , (3) also of execution proceedings "in order to do equity between the judgment creditors according to the spirit of the Civil Procedure Codo", (4) also on the ground that the transfer would tend to the convenience of both parties, and more especially to the applicant (5) The fact howover, that the Judge of the Court was not sufficiently acquainted with the character in which the disputed signatures were written was held not to be sufficient ground, as in such a case it would be open to the parties to call exports (6)

The section does not make it obligatory in a Court to record the reasons. for its order, and though it is desirable that the reasons should be recorded yet a failure to do so will not vitiate the order or the subsequent proceedings (7) Not is the transfer invalid if the order has been made under a misconception of facts (8) As to the presumption where there is no order on the face of the proceedings, see note, (9) as to jurisdiction to transfer, see note "Pending post

"Surt, appeal, or other proceeding' -The term "surt" in the earlier Code should it was held be construed in its broadest sense (10) The section. itself shows that it is applicable to appeals, a power which was not given to the High Courts by the Letters Patent (11) or appeals The case law under the Code of 1882 was as follows -As regards miscellaneous proceedings this section, taken with sect 617 (corresponding with sect 141) was held to authorize the transfer of a claim under sect 331.(1) and of winding up proceedings under the Indian Companies Act. 1882, by the High Court from a District Court to itself, the Act providing for their transfer from one District Court to another (2) There was a conflict of omining whether the word "suit" in the section which this replaces included execution proceedings or not Allahabad (3) and Bombay (1) High Courts held that it did It is to be observed that sect 223 of the former Code related to transfer of applications for execution The Madras High Court appears to have been of opinion that the word "sust" in this section in the last Code was used in its restricted sense of proceedings before decree, but that even assuming that it included execution proceedings. the limitation as to jurisdiction contained in the section, which authorized the transfer to a Suhordinate Court competent to try the suit, could only be imported into sect 223 of the Code of 1882, so far as it was consistent with that section (5) The Calentta High Court held both under the corresponding provisions in the Code of 1859.(6) as also under the Code of 1882.(7) that there was no power under this section of that Code to transfer execution proceedings. The present section extends the Courts' power over miscellaneous proceedings other than suits or appeals

"Pending"—The word used in the corresponding section of the Code of 1859 was "instituted". It was accordingly held that the transfer could take place only on the institution of the suit, and that it was not intended that a case in progress of trial might be transferred (8). "pending" bars any such construction in future, a construction which is further prohibited by the insertion of the words "at any stage". So it has been held, that the High Court had jurisdiction under this section to make a transfer to a Subordinate Judge, though the case was in part heard (1). Even now, however, the section will not authorize a transfer affecting any special exclusive jurisdiction conferred by law (2). So as the Court which pronounced the judgment is the only Court which can review it, proceedings on an application for a review of a Court's decision cannot be transferred to another Court (3). Nor may a District Court exercise its powers to transfer so as to oust any Court of a jurisdiction over any particular suit which may have been referred to it by order of a High Court or other Supreme Court (1). Thus, it has been held that the terms of the section are mapphcable to a suit which the Subordinate Court had received by an order of remand from a Court to which the District Court was itself subordinate (5).

The word "pending" denotes, it is said, duly pending. The suit, therefore, to be transferred must, it has been held, be pending in a Court of competent jurisdiction, and an order made under this section will have no effect if the Court in which the suit is pending has no jurisdiction over it (6)

"Subordinate"—A transfer may be made only from or to a Court to which the Code applies In the under mentioned case, (7) Hutchins, J. considered that the District Judge would have the power of transferring a case pending before one village munsif to another, not under this section, which he considered questionable, but under general principles, as some one must have the power, and it would be best vested in the munsif's official superior, the District Judgo. The subordination contemplated is apparently not that on the creumstance that a transfer made 12 such a case might be inconsistent with the order of remand, and change the Court to which the appeal from the final order would lie in the case But see also Taruchauth Mockerjee v Gource Chura Mockerjee, 3 W R 147 (1865) In Sita Ram v Nanni Dulanja, 21 A 230 (1899), it was considered that s 25 was not applicable to a case for the purposes of anneal as in sect. 23, clause (1), ante, but of an administrative character (1) It has fermerly held that oneo a Court withdrew a suit and transferred it to its own files for trial, it exhausted all its powers under this section and it is not competent to retransfer it again to a Subordinate Court (2) The section however [see (1) (b) (m)], now authorizes a Court after withdrawing a case to retransfer it for trial or disposal. The Suberdinate Court must be competent to try the smt—that is, must have jurisdiction (3) A District Judge can transfer a probate case for trial to a Suberdinate Judge under clause (d), suh sect (2), sect 23. Act XII of 1887 (1) Where in a recent case a suit was filed as a Small Cause Court suit in the Court of a Subordinate Judge who had both Small Cause and regular purisdiction, and be transferred it to the file tried by him as ordinary Judge, and passed a decree deciding a question of title to immeveable property, it was held that there was no substantial irregularity and that the decree was not final, but appealable, since it could not have been passed by a Small Cause Court (5) As to the power of District Judges under the Bomhay Civil Courts Act, to refer to Assistant Judges applications under special Acts for disposal sec note (6)

"Try or dispose of"—The word "trial" includes every recognized method of procedure laid down in the Code, and it is not necessary for the transfer that the Court transferring should not contemplate a reference of the case te arbitration (7) The present section adds the words "dispose of" which will eften be applicable in the case of the miscellaneous proceedings to which the section is extended

"Court of Small Causes"—The expression "a Court of Small Causes" in the last clause of this section means a Court properly and strictly so called, and does not include a Court invested with the jurisdiction of a Court of Small Causes (8). The High Court, in the excreise of its appellate jurisdiction, has the power to transfer a suit from the Calcutta Court of Small Causes to any other Court having equal or superior jurisdiction (9). The Court to which a suit is transferred will not become a Small Cause Court but only the suit transferred.

He retired from office, and the District Judge directed his successor, who had no Small Cause Court jurisdiction, to try it, it was held that the order must be considered as passed under this section, and no appeal lay from the decision to the District Court

Institution of Suits.

26 Every suit shall be instituted by the presentation of Institution of suits a plaint or in such other manner as may be prescribed.

"Plaint"—A plaint means a private memorial tendered to a Court in which the person sets forth his cause of action, the exhibition of an action in writing (3). It answers to the "statement of claim" in England. In India a plaintiff may present a written statement also. O VII rr. 1-6 presentle the contents of the plaint, which is the document with which every suit is instituted in this country, its object being to invoke the Court's assistance for the declaration, preservation, or enforcement of the plaintiff singht. A suit, according to this section must commence with a plaint, and a proceeding which is capable of terminating in a decree or an order having the force of a decree cannot, on that ground alone, be deemed to be a suit within the incaning of the Code, if it has not commenced with a plaint. Such a proceeding is, in strictness, only a proceeding in a suit (4)

Presentation (a) Time —The only question which arises as to this, is whether a plaint may be presented on a Sunday or holiday, or out of Comb hours. It has been enjoined that, without the consent of parties and in the al since of majorit recessity in a civil trial should proceed on Sundays or garetted he class (1). In Imba however, Surday is not a dice on n,(2) and the helling of a ju heral proceeding on a close helday, though it may be an irregularity which if projudice be shown would entitle a party to have the proceding set a decision in the an irregularity as can be waved (3). It has been expressly provided in the Bengal, N.W.P. and Assum (and Courts Act, and the same will probably be held on general principles, to be the case that a judicial act done on a close holday is not invalid by reason only of its having been done on that day (1). Advantually better that a judicial act do no on a close holday is not invalid by reason only of its having been done on that day (1). Advantually better the dose, for under the Lamitation Act if the period express when the Courts are closed, the suit may be alimited on the day that the Court resorces, and so may any out extend (7).

(b) To whom - The former section required that the plaint should be presented to the Court or such officer who was specially appointed in that lightly This will be a now though the words have been omitted. Ordinarily, the plaint is pit ented to the Court. Addition, to the clerk of a Small Cause Court has be a held sufficient, (8) but not to a nazir (9) or moonserim (10). A plaint under let X of 1859 presented to an Assistant Collector and not to the Collector, was field not to be properly filed (11).

(c) Place—Ordinarily the plaint is presented in open Court. The placing of a patition of appeal on a table when the officer is not present is not a present into it of him (12). The Allahabad High Court held that the presentation of a plaint at the private residence of the Munsif was not a sufficient institution (13). But in Benjal a plaint delivered at the private residence of a clerk of a Small Cause Court has been held to have been properly filed (14). sufficient by the Madras High Court (1) Where a plaintiff presented a plaint to the District Court, the Suhordinate Judge's Court in which he ought to have presented it being then temporarily closed, it was held that the District Court could not be considered a Court of first instance competent to receive the plaint (2)

Date -The Code does not provide that the plaint should be dated, but it is generally provided by rules framed by the High Courts that the actual date of presentation should be endorsed on the plaint by the officer receiving Where a plaint was presented on the 29th and the endorsement stated that it was accepted on the 31st, the former and not the latter date was held to be the date of institution (3) Where two suits are filed on the same day it must be presumed, until the contrary is proved that they were presented and admitted in the order in which the numbers appear in the Register of Civil Suits (4) The Code does not ordain or imply that, in the absence of a sufficient stamp, there can be no presentation, nor does the Limitation Act There is no warrant for inferring that a plaint means a plaint duly stamped So where a plaint was presented on the 14th September with an insufficient stamp, but the deficient stamp duty was paid on the 18th September, it was held that the suit was instituted on the 14th September (5) The date of institu tion should be reckened from the date of presentation, and not from that on which the requisite court fees are subsequently put in so as to make it admissible as a plaint (6)

Registration -Seet 17 of the Registration Act (III of 1877) does not apply to proper judicial proceedings, whether consisting of pleadings filed by the parties or orders made by the Court (7)

The Court has also a discretion to award interest after decree The contract becomes merged in the decree, and the plaintiff recovers only such interest as, according to the course and practice of the Court, is allowed on debts for which the creditor has the security of its decree (1) Interest if not given in the decree is taken to have been refused,(2) but a party may by his conduct he estopped from objecting that execution cannot issue for a higher rate than that provided in the decree (3) If a decree holder gives up a portion of his claim and verbally agrees to receive the remainder hy instalments, he does not thereby give up interest to which he is entitled under the decree (4) The rule of damdupat exists only so long as the contractual relation of dehtor and creditor exists, but not when that relation has come to an end hy reason of a decree (2) Thus where a decree has been passed on a mortgage the rule does not apply to the interest accruing after the date fixed for redemption (6) The jule of damdupat is not applicable if it was not applicable at the time when the decree hecame final and binding (7) The discretionary powers conferred by this section may be exercised without reference to the law of damdupat (8)

"In the decree"—A Court is not empowered by this section merely to embody in a decree interest which has been adjudged payable in the sut, for it is said that such a reading of the section would make it surplusage, as it does not require a rule of procedure to enable a Court to decree a rehef which it has adjudged in its judgment (9). It has therefore been held that the Court may in the decree order payment of interest from the date of the suit onwards, although the judgment awards interest for the period prior to the institution of the suit only (10). But where a Judge in adjudging a specific sum, principal and interest, in terms dismissed "the rest of the claim," it was held that as the claim of interest after the justitution of the suit was part of "the rest of the claim," and with it stood dismissed, the Court could not give interest by way of amendment of its decree (11). Costs.

35 (1) Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed, and to the provisions of any law for the time being in force, the costs of and incident to all suits shall be in the discretion of the Court, and the Court shall have full power to determine by whom or out of what property and to what extent such costs are to be paid, and to give all necessary directions for the purposes aforesaid. The fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the suit shall be no bar to the exercise of such rowers.

(2) Where the Court directs that any costs shall not follow

the event, the Court shall state its icasons in writing

(3) The Court may give interest on costs at any late not exceeding six per cent per annum, and such interest shall be added to the costs and shall be recoverable as such

Costs generally -The present section replaces sects 218-222 of the last Code The first clause is with some additions taken from a 5 of the Judi eature Act of 1890, and in effect embodies the provisions of sects 218-220 of the last Code As regards the subject of execution see sect 36 of this Code Sect 221 has been transferred to O XX r 6 where it appears as the third clause of that rule Sect 222 is incorporated in the third clause of this section, the direction as to the payment of costs being paid out of or charged upon the subject matter of the suit being omitted. The power to order this is contained in the first clause of this section. As regards this, it has been held that a mortgagee having had the henefit of a partition and having accented and approved of it as part of his title was though not a party to the partition suit bound by the equities attaching to the mortgaged property as incidents of the partition and was therefore hable in respect of a proportionate share of the charge for costs created by the order of the Court made in that suit under this scetion and such proportionate share of these costs should be deducted in priority out of the proceeds of the sale of the mortgaged pro perty (2) Under the circumstances stated the cases decided under the former sections are here given

Disposal of costs —Sect 218 of the last Code enacted that When disposing of any application under this Code the Court may live to either party the costs of such application or may reserve the consideration of such costs for any future stage of the proceedings." When costs of an interlocutory proceeding have been disposed of, the award of general costs of the suit does not loterfere with that interlocutory order (1). A Court finally determining a suit is hound to decide by which of the parties before it the costs shall he horne, it is not at hiberty to declare that the costs shall be boroc by the unsuccessful party in a suit to be hereafter brought (2). A decree drawn strictly in accordance with the provisions of sect. 88, of the Transfer of Property Act, directs the costs to he recovered out of the mortgaged property (3). An omission to award costs cannot be considered a mere clerical error, but must he rectified by way of review within the prescribed time (4).

Parties paying or receiving costs -The person who receives the costs must, of course, be a party to the suit. As regards the persoo who may be ordered to pay, the general rule in Eoglish Courts has been said to be, (3) that Courts have so power except over parties to the record, though an exception has been made where the party before the Court is a mere puppet in the hands of a stranger to the suit The Courts here have, in some cases, ordered persons not party to the record to pay costs (6) But under the last Code only parties could be made hable This appeared from the words, "any other party to the suit" in sect 102 of that Code (7) Where, however, there has been a con tempt of Court, as where straogers were the real though hiddee plaintiffs, and had executed a false lease in favour of the nominal plaintiff, who had brought the suit oo the strength of such false lease, it was held that though the Code gave no power, yet that the High Court, inheriting the powers of the Supreme Court, could order such straogers to pay the costs of the suit (8) Persons ioterested, on bohalf of whom a suit is brought under O I r 8 (formerly sect 30) but not joining or joined as parties, should out be made to pay costs (9) Where but as to whether the Supreme Court, whese powers are imberited by the High Court, would have been bound by Hayward a Gifford, 4 M. & W 194, see judgment of Peacock, CJ, in Jontee Chundes Sein v hunded Lill Doss, 14 W R 1 (1865) (vpfc...ls

Power of Court as to costs—Seet 220 of the last Code provided as follows "(1) The Court shall have full power to give and apportion costs of every application and suit in any manner it thinks fit, and the fact that the Court has no jurisdiction to try the case is no bar to the exercise of such power Provided that if the Court directs that the costs of any application or suit shall not follow the event, the Court shall state its reason in writing (2) Every order relating to costs made under this Code and not forming part of a decree may be executed as if it were a decree for money."

The discretion to award costs was subject to other provisions and was thus limited in the case of certain suits instituted in the High Court, but cogmizable by the Presidency Small Cause Conrts (7) Where A demanded a particular sum as due to him from B, and the latter tendered a less amount, saying that that was all he owed, it was held in an action brought in the High Court that A was entitled to full costs, not being under any obligation to accept the lesser sum and sue for the balance in the Small Cruse Court (8) For sections of the Code affecting the discretion, see O XI r 3 and O XXI r 72. The power, however, given, though a full power, was subject to the control of the Court of Appeal (9). The discretion as to the award of costs which a Court has is not taken away by the fact that a party to a suit is protected under the provisions of the Judicial Officers Protection Act (10)

As regards apportionment, the general rule is that if a plaintiff recovers a less amount than he claimed in his plaint, his costs should be apportioned rule of law that a successful party is entitled to his costs (1) The word "event" may, however, be read distributively, and where there are distinct causes of action the general costs of the cause follow the judgment, but the easts of the particular issues should be taxed in favour of the party who has succeeded on them (2) And the same rule is commonly applied in all cases where several issues are rused, and the party fails as to some and is successful as to others

The same general principles apply in the case of appeals (3) though the east of an appeal may be severable from the general costs of the suit (4) It is a general, but not a nunversal rule, that the discretion of the Court below as to costs is not altered when there is no substantial alteration made in the decree itself (5) The respondent will not be deprived of costs on the dismissal of the appeal on the ground that the appellant had no previous notice of the preliminary objection which has prevailed (6) In his appeal from the Judge's order passed in favour of the plaintiff, and disallowing his own claim for costs, a defendant unnecessarily made a co defendant a respondent As this respondent could not be injured in any way in the appeal, it was held by Sir Baines Peacock (Mitter, J, dissenting) that although the appeal was dis missed, the ee defendant was not entitled to costs simply hecause he had been present watching the ease (7) When an Appellate Court decrees an appeal and gives costs of its own Court, the costs of the first Court should be included in the decree (8) A decree for "usual costs and interest" means all costs which the successful party has incurred from the commencement of the suit until the date of the final decree with interest at (now) 6 per cent from the date of the decree (9) A direction in a decree that "the respondent should pay to the appellants the costs incurred by them in the Lower Court" means the costs specified in the decree appealed against as the costs incurred by the appellants (10) Where a decree under which costs have been recovered is set aside in appeal an express order is not needed for a refund of the costs with interest (11)

The same principles are applied in appeals to the Privi Council where the successful appellant is, as a rule, entitled to his costs (1). But where an appeal was aftirmed upon wholly different grounds from those relied upon by the Court below, the dismissal was ordered to be without costs (2). And where a partial alteration was made by the Appellate Court in the decree of the Court below, as to the rate of interest awarded, but in other respects the decree was affirmed, both parties were directed to pay their own costs of appeal (3). No costs have been given where the parties maintained pleas far in excess of their respective legal rights, (1) or where the appellant has failed as to part of his appeal, (3) or where the appellant has failed as to part of his appeal, (5) or where the appellant has used forged documents (6). It is not nossible to define what is good cause. The rule laid down in Cooper a Whittingham (8) that "where a plaintiff comes to enforce a legal right, and there has been no miscouduct on his part, the Court cannot take away his light to costs." has been adopted in this country (9) and by the Court of Appeal in England But the same Court has held (10) that unscended was not necessary to constitute good cause for depriving a successful plaintiff of costs "Everything which increases the litigation and the costs, and which places upon the defendant a burden which he ought not to bear in the course of that litigation, is perfectly 'good cause' for depriving the plaintiff of his costs "(II) The Court may consider not merely the conduct of the party in the actual litigation, but may take into consideration matters which led up to it (12) Where a defendant has by his mis statements made under circum stances imposing au obligation on him to be truthful brought higgation on humself, and rendered an action against him reasonable there is good cause for depriving him of his costs (13) If the action is frivolous or vexatious tho planutiff may be deprived of costs (1) If the Court thinks that the suit is a vexatious one and that no real damage has been sustained, it may give nominal damages to the plaintiff and award costs to the defendant, as in substance in such a case the defendant succeeds (2) Costs have been dis allowed where a party acted with malice and malevolence, (3) as distinguished from mere hardness, in exciensing a civil right, (1) and where the defence was found to he false and unscrupulous (5) A party has been refused costs where he induced plaintiff to sue him; (6) or did not raise the plea of jurisdiction ou which he succeeded until special appeal (7) It has been held that the fact that a defendant has, previously to a suit heing filed, admitted that the money sued for was due was not a ground for depriving plaintiff of his costs (8) This would be so if, though making an admission, a defendant was unwilling or refused to pay But if not so, aliter, for the Court may deprive a plaintiff of costs where his suit is needlessly launched (9) See also cases cited ante in connection with appeals to the Courts of this country, or the Privy Council It is not possible to formulate any precise rules As has heen well said, "We can get no nearer to a perfect test then the enquiry whether it would be more fair as between the parties that some exception should be made in the special instance to the jule that the costs should follow upon success "(10)

Calculation of Costs - In the High Courts, rules exist under which there is a regular scale of costs and the parties' costs are taxed according to this scale Pleuders' fees must also be calculated according to the rules govern ing them (7) The seile on which costs should be awarded to a defendant depends on what the plantificlams against him . Execution for Costs -The portion of sect 220 as relating to execution is omitted. See now sect 36. If the order for costs forms part of a decree such decree is executed in the ordinary way. Where, in a partition suit, the plaintiff, after decree, took no steps, but the estate was partitioned at the instance of one of the defendants, it was held that he must first obtain an order for payment, and if payment he not obtained then apply for execu tion (3) If the order does not form part of the decree it may be executed as if it were a decree for the payment of money But such an order is not a decree (4) A mamlatdar has the same power to levy costs decreed by the High Court as he has regarding costs decreed in his own court (5) No separate suit hes for the recovery of costs awardable under the Code, a nemedy in execution being given (6) But where a Court is not entitled to order costs and costs are incurred, they may be made the subject of considera tion in a subsequent suit (7) If it can order costs and does not do so, no separate suit will be (8) An objection as to costs is a matter which should he raised in the shape of an application to amend or review the origina decree, and failing that, by way of regular appeal against the decree, but no objection can be raised in execution of it (9) A summary remedy for paymen of costs against his chent has been given to solicitors, but they cannot under the rule of Court so giving it enforce payment against the chent's repie sentatives (10)

Set off of costs -O XX r 6 enacts that "The Court may direct that the costs payable to one party by the other shall be set off against the sum which is admitted or found to be due from the former to the latter" This rule, which is a re-enactment of sect 221 of the last Code, is one of those section in which the general equitable principle of set off is recognized Bec not to O VIII 1 6, post A mortgagor is entitled to set off or ded, w amount of costs payable to him under the decree against or from the m debt payable by him (11) The section has been applied by analogy, of deduction of costs from the purchase money in pre countion suits (1) A setoff cannot be allowed for costs not actually awarded, and a decree which is increable of being enforced cannot be set off against a decree which is abye (2)

Interest on costs —Interest cannot be allowed up costs where the decree itself is silent on the point, unless submission is made by the parties to the discretion of the Court (3) Tho view once taken that sect 222 and sect 200 of the last Code did not affect the special provisions as to allowance of interest in the Transfer of Property Act (1) has been descented from and overruled (5)

Appeal as to costs.-It was proposed to enact in sect 26, vost, that " No oppeal shall be on a matter of costs only where by law such costs are left to the discretion of the Court, except by leave of the Appellote Court, obtained on on application accompanied by a memorandum of appeal" As, however, objection was taken the clause has been omitted with the result that the matter is still regulated by the previous case law. Under the Code of 1859 it was held that a regular appeal would be on a more question of costs, although as the lower Court had a discretion in the matter, any interference with its order ought also to be excressed with discretion. Though, however, an improper exercise of discretion might be matter of regular appeal, no special appeal would he unless the award of costs was contrary to law (6) A similar rulo was laid down (7) under the Code of 1877. Under the last Code first appeals vero given not merely from decrees but also from any part of the decrees, (8)

and necessarily therefore against the part of the decree awarding costs. But such an award was then, as before, a matter of discretion, and the Court of Appeal would generally only interfere where a matter of principle was involved, (1) whether in first appeal from a decree (2) or order, (3) or in second appeal (4). The Court has also held its interference justifiable in first appeal where, though strictly speaking no question of principle is involved, there has either been misapprehension as to facts of no real exercise of discretion at all (5).

The Bombay High Court, (6) eiting certain English decisions, has held that the principle to be deduced from them is that Appeal Courts should interfere with the exercise of discretion by the lower Courts as to costs when there has been any violation of any established principle, (7) misapprehension of facts, (8) or where there has been no real exercise of discretion at all (9). These principles will be of general application in first appeals and appeals from orders. In the case of second appeals it must be shown that the order complained of comes within the provisions of sect. 100

EXECUTION.

GENERAL.

36 The provisions of this Code relating to the execution of decrees shall, so far as they are applicable, be deemed to apply to the execution of orders

Orders—This section replaces and supersedes the first paragraph of sect 649 of the last Code, the second paragraph being incorporated in the next section. By virtue of sect 617 (now 111) and seet 649 of the Code of 1882, it was beld that an order obtained from a Judge in Chambers by an attorney against bis client for payment of costs might be executed under Chapter XIX of the Code of 1882, corresponding with the present Part (1). By virtue of seet 649 of the last Code, execution might have been had of a judgment entered up under sect 86 of the Insolvent Act (2).

Execution—Execution is the enforcement by process of Court of its Chapter in the last Code was held to mean the enforcement of the decrees of Courts by process of execution only, viz the different kind of execution dalt with in the Chapter for compelling the judgment debtor to obey the order of the Court (3). Process in execution must always be granted by the direct act of the Court itself. And as parties cannot invoke the process do noto either by agreement or by their conduct so meither can they extend the relief which the Court has chosen to award (4). Primd Jaces it is the right of every litigant to call on the Courts to take such action as may be requisite to secure the execution cannot impose terms which are not in the favour, and the Court of execution cannot impose terms which are not in the decree (5). ought not to be conducted in a shipshod and slovenly fashion, as if it were an unimportant branch of the work they have to do in the administration of justice but it ought to be conducted with as much care as the procedure in suits because of the difficulties which so frequently arise. The Courts are bound to look to the Code for the procedure they should follow in these execution proceedings (1)

"Provisions of this Gode"—This Part, together with O XXI, replaces Chapter XIX of the Code of 1882. The provisions relating to execution have been divided into two portions, viz. those contained in the present Part, and those contained in the Rules of O XXI, which must be read with it. These Rules refer to minor points of procedure. The arrangement and numbering of this Part has been very materially altered, and sections appearing in it have been taken from other portions of the old Code. Further, the sections of the Code reproduced have been added to, and made the subject of important amend ments, which, for the most part, embody or have been suggested by previous case law. A considerable number of the sections or portions of the sections are entirely new.

Firstly, the Code is declared applicable to decrees and orders, and a definition given of the term "Court which passed the decree" (sects 36, 37) [transfers of decrees to the Collectors for execution are dealt with in sects 68-72 and the Third Schedule] Then follow provisions relating to the Courts by which decrees may be executed, and the jurisduction of such Courts (sects 38-46), thirdly, the questions to be determined by those Courts (sect 47, formerly 244), fourthly, the limit of time for execution (sect 48), fifthly and sixthly, transferces, legsl representatives, and procedure in execution respectively (sects 49-51), seventhly, the mode of execution, whether by arrest, attachment, or sale (sects 55-72), eighthly, payment and distribution of assets (sect 75), and lastly, the resistance to execution (sect 71) Other provisions concerning these matters are contained in the 103 when 50 N.XVI.

The main alterations to be noted in the sections are as follows—the introduction of piecepts (sect—16), and of sects 53, 61, and amendments of sect—241 (now sect—47), and of the sections corresponding with sects—51, 55 (1) (2) 62, 64, 73—As regards sects—68 et seq. dealing with execution by Collectors, the provisions, as they deal with a special matter, and are not of general application, have been placed in the Third Schedule

The alterations in the rules are cited under O XXf

The chief omissions in the sections are of clauses (a) and (b) of the former sect 244 (see notes to seet 17) and of seet 288 of the last Code, which it was considered might be omitted, having regard to the provisions of Act XVfII of 1850 Sect 257A of the last Code has also been omitted it was first enacted by Act XII of 1879, with a view to protect the interests of judgment debtors against unidue pressure by decree holders. The Select Committee stated that the section had given rise to conflicting decisions and as interpreted by the injority of the High Courts, was found in practice to be of hittle service to judgment debtors. Moreover, sect 16 of the Indian

Contract Act, as amended, was considered to afford adequate protection where it is required. As, however, the section remains in force until the coming into operation of the present Code, and some cases decided under it have a relation to sect 258 (now O XXI r 2), the following notes on the section are more:

Object of section 257A of last Gode, now omitted —The Legislature considered that the power of executing a decree placed the holder of it in a position to exercise undue pressure over the judgment debtor and enabled him to obtain terms too favourable to himself from the latter, whose interests needed protection at the hands of the Court which passed the decree (I) The object is to avoid inconvenience and delay in executing the decree and its being held in terronem over the debtor, and to afford protection against unfair arrangements, which protection is insured by the necessity for sanction (2)

"The Court"—It was held under the last Code that the Court to which a decree had been transferred for execution could not pass an order under this section and that sanction could be given only by the Court which passed the decree (3)

"Shall be void"—Under the last Code an agreement of the nature stated was declared to be void, and a question arose whether it was void in tole and for all purposes or for the purposes of execution proceedings only, and was enforceable by a fresh suit (4). It is not easy to reconcile all the decisions on the point. There is no absolute probabition against such an agreement. The section, however, forbids the enforcement of an agreement entered into in contravention of the section, while a decree is subsisting and enforceable. If that be so then the decree must be enforced by execution and not by separate suit, and in such execution an unsanctioned agreement will not be recognized. If however an agreement is such that it adjusts and puts an end to the decree which thus ceases to be enforceable no question of or in execution arises, and the substituted agreement may be made the subject of a fresh smit (5).

"Every agreement"—The agreement referred to to give time is an agreement to pay the judgment debt with a supulation that it shall not be payable at the time when under the decree it became payable. An agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment implies cx vi termini that there has been no actual satisfaction but merely a stipulation for future satisfaction Therefore an agreement under which there is an actual and present satisfac tion of the judgment replacing it and putting an end to the decree is not within the section In other words, the agreement to which the section relates is one which suspends and does not destroy the rights of execution consequent on the decree (1) The last clause presupposes the existence of a judgment debt, for the sum paid eannot he applied in satisfaction unless there is a subsisting judgment to which it can he applied. Where the judgment deht is extinguished in whole or in part by the substitution for it of a contract, such a contract cannot be regarded as an agreement to give time for the satisfaction of a judgment debt, since the latter, to the extent to which it has been extinguished, is no longer in existence. The agreement in such a case is only an adjustment of the decree under O XXI r 2, which, if not certified, will not prevent execu

one from the other (4) The section did not apply to agreements by persons who are not parties to the suit in which the original decree was made (c) Persons who have nothing to do with a decree cannot fall within the mischief struck at by the section But the same consideration cannot apply where a person is substantially bound by the decree though not proforms a party to it (6) It was held that an agreement was none the less void because one of the parties to it, who was the legal representative of one of the judgment dobtors, had not been one of the parties to the suit in which the decree was obtained (7)

Enforceable—It was held under the last Code that the section must be deemed to relate to judgment debts which are still enforceable (8)

An order passed under this section being one relating to the excention of the decree was a noncalible (5).

"Decree Order '-For the meaning of these terms, see note to sect 2 ante

What decree may be executed.—The rule my shortly be stated to be—the decree of the Court of first instance until appeal and after that the decree of the Court of last instance. Whether the decree of the appellate Court is for reversing or for affirming the decree against which the appeal is preferred it is, in either case, the final decree in the cause and as such the only decree which is capable of being enforced by execution after it is once pronounced. If the decree of the lower Court is reversed it is absolutely dead and gone, if it is affirmed or modified it is equally so though in a different way namely by being merged in the decree of the superior Court which takes its place for all intents and purposes (6). It it is aftered by the Court of first instance execution cannot issue (7). But where the appellate decree is not complete in itself reference may be made to the prior decree (1) The decree however which is executed is the appellate decree. Where a decree was compromised by agreement made by the parties and communicated to the Court which passed the decree, held that the effect of the decree was extinguished by the agreement which could only be enforced by a fresh suit and not by an application for execution of the former decree (2). When a decree contains a direction for payment and creates a charge and default is made, the decree cannot be at once executed the proper course for its enforcement is not to apply for execution, but to apply for either an order for an account and sale or to institute a suit for enforcing the charge (3).

From which Court execution may be had -See the notes to sects 37, 38, 68-72, and Third Schedule The general jurisdiction of such Courts is dealt with post Seets 43, 44, 45 deal with execution of decrees passed by British Courts either in places to which this Part does not extend such as those scheduled districts to which the Code or this portion of it has not been extended execution of decrees passed by Courts of Nativo States, and issue of precepts to certain British Courts in foreign territory The Courts, therefore, by which execution may be given are Courts in British India executing either their own decrees or the decrees of other Courts in British India or Courts in British India executing the decrees of British Courts in foreign territory (ect 43) or Native Courts of such territory (sect 44) There remains the question of execution of decrees of British Indian Courts out of British Indian territory As regards this, the general principle is that Courts of British India have no authority to send their decrees for execution to Courts not in British India (4) An exception to this rule exists (sect 45) in the case of British Courts in foreign territory, Pro vided that such execution is authorized under the notification of the Governor general (5)

Explanation—For the purposes of this section, a Court, which would have been competent to pass the decree, shall not be deemed to be incompetent to execute it merely because, by reason of the amount of rent or mesne profits ascertained for a period subsequent to the institution of the suit, the pecuniary limits of the jurisdiction of such Court are exceeded '

This section would have cleared up several points which have been the subject of Judicial decision. The Court executing the decree referred to is as appears from sect 38 either the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which it is sent for execution. (lause [5] with some modifications has been embodied in O NI r 3. The other clauses have not been enacted as however they have reference tapreceding case law they are here reproduced and commented upon.

Clauso (1)—There has been a conflict of lection on the question whether the Court executing a transferred decree was restricted to the perimary limits of its jurisdiction (1). questions in issuo in the suit. The proposed clause adopted the principle of those decisions which held that a Court had no jurisdiction to execute a decree sent to it when the decree had been passed in a suit, the value or subject matter of which was in excess of the pecumary limits of its ordinary jurisdiction and that the power to send a decree to "another Court" meant another Court having junisdiction, and competent to execute that decree, having regard to the amount or value of the subject matter of its ordinary jurisdiction. The words "at the time of its institution" were introduced to declare beyond doubt that a Court having jurisdiction to grant a deerce has also authority to execute it, even though the pecuniary limits of its inrisdiction may be subsequently exceeded by the operation of incidental eauses, such as a rise in the value of property or the gradual accumulation of interest (1) With this Clause should be read the Explanation, which was intended to give effect to the undermentioned decision (2) This Explanation was confined to cases of rent or mesne profits but, as stated, the principle is one of general application, and has been applied in cases of interest also Clauses (2) and (3)—These both refer to suits on mortgages and charges, and form an evection to the general principle onacted in the fourth Clause of the proposed section. They embody the result of the decisions noted (3) in which it was held that it would be impossible to apply the provisions of the Transfer of Property Act relating to sales in accordance with the decree passed in a suit on a mortgage if it were necessary to apply to different Courts to obtain realization of the mortgaged dobt by sale of the properties hypothecated. It was, however, pointed out that the Court passing the decree is not alone competent, for in some cases it might be more convenient that sales of various lots mortgaged should be held in the Districts in which they are situate (4). Moreover, a sale under a mortgage decree is not in its proper sense a sale in execution, being a sale directed by the decree itself (5).

Clause (4)—If at the time a suit is brought a Court has no tenitonal jurisdiction over the subject matter, then it has no jurisdiction to execute such decree. Sect 16 indicates that the object of the Code is to limit the territorial jurisdiction of the Courts in regard to the property they are entitled to deal with, and as execution is only a continuation of the suit a Court in the letter stages of a suit has no greater powers than it possessed at its institution Voiceover (and this applies to all cases whether the decree is that of the Court

Clause (5) —This is a provision inserted for convenience it being obviously undestrable in many cases, and in others not practicoble, that an entire estate should be sold otherwise than as a whole (2). (a) where the deeree to be executed has been passed in the exercise of appellate jurisdiction, the Court of first instance, and

(b) where the Court of first instance has ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it, the Court which, if the suit wherein the decree was passed was instituted at the time of making the application for the execution of the decree, would have jurisdiction to try such suit.

"Include"-This section corresponds with the second paragraph of sect 649 of the last Code as amended by Act XII of 1879, which explained the meaning of the expression the "Court which passed the decree does not exclude the Court which originally passed the decree as being a Court in which an application for execution should be made, but merely includes another Court (1) In clause (a) the expression "Court of first instance been substituted for "Court which passed the decree from which the appeal was preferred," the reason being that as a matter of practice, the Court of inter mediate appeal never executes a decree passed on second appeal The meaning of the words " ceased to exist or to have jurisdiction to execute it " are explained in the under mentioned cases (2) The terms of clause (b) are general and draw no distinction as to the nature of the cause which puts an end to the jurisdiction (3) It was held under the last Code that the Court to which a decree was transferred for execution, if it had ceased to have territorial jurisdiction might either of its own motion or when applied to under sect 223 of that Code, transfer it for execution to the Court which had territorial jurisdiction, (4) and that a comparison of that section with the last paragraph of section 649, corresponding with this section, indicated that term torial jurisdiction is a condition precedent to a Court executing a decree (5) I his is so now

COURTS BY WHICH DECREES MAY BE EXECUTED.

38. A decree may be executed either by the Court which court by which decree may be executed. passed it, or by the Court to which it is sent for execution.

Courts of Execution .- Under sect 223 of the last Code also a decree might have been executed either by the Court which passed it or by the Court to which it was transferred for execution under the circumstances mentioned in that section by the former Court. According to this procedure, the Court which passed the decree was after transfer virtually deprived of control until the decree was returned, and to all intents and purposes execution was everywhere in suspense except in the particular Court which happened to have the decree on its file. The Court to which the dicree was transferred had seizin of the execution proceedings, and carried them on until as far as passible execution was obtained. The decree might then have been transferred tu another Court, and the process repeated until full execution was had the legality of concurrent execution has been recognized,(1) both under the Cades of 1559 and 1877, as well as that of 1882, in practice it was not generally The Court to which the decree was transferred could not, after executing it as far as it could, transfer it directly to a third Court It had to send it back to the Court which passed the decree, which might then transfer it to a third Caurt, a procedure which was cumbersome and caused delay (2) It was at first considered in Committee that the results of the transfer system, which semausly affected the chances of realization and added greatly to the expenses eventually to he home by the judgment debtor, were not justified by any compensating advantage. Excess in realization which the farmer system was primarily intraduced to prevent, could, they cansidered, he quite as effectively uhreated by reserving the puwer of ordering attachment or sale tu the Court which passed the decree and which would not issue a precept for either of these purposes unless, looking to the amount of assets obtained from all sources, it cansidered such action to be necessary. Special limitations were later placed on this power. It was proposed that the Court which passed a decree should be responsible throughout for seeing it enforced and the Court to which the precept was assued should have jurisdiction only to entertain objections not affecting the legality or propriety of the precept or the right It was thus proposed to effect an important simplificato exceute the decree tion of procedure by substituting execution by precept for the former procedure by transfer of the decree This would have involved two results, viz, firstly, concurrent execution as opposed to the former practice under which there was only one Court at one time carrying out the execution of a decree, and, secondly, execution by one Comt (that to which the precept is given) under the direction of another Court (or that which passed the decree) as opposed to the former practice under which the Court in which the execution proceedings were pending had control of thom The Court passing the decree might thus have executed the decree itself, and might at the same time have issued precepts to another Court or to two or more Courts directing simul taueous execution of the deerce The conduct of the execution would have remained in the hands of the Court passing the decree, which might from time to time give such directions as it thought fit regarding the execution to the Court to which the precept is issued, whose powers were stated and limited The adoption of the precept system would of necessity have abolished the elaborate conditions of transfer embodied in sect 223 of the last Code The Select Committee, which, however, considered the Draft Bill imme diately prior to its introduction, considered that the difficulties in the existing system arose not so much from the machinery of execution itself as from the defective manner in which it was worked. They therefore stated that they were unable to accept the proposal of the Committee of 1902 in relation to the execution of decrees by precept They were, however, so far in accord with the view expressed by that Committee as to have been able to insert sect 16, post, onabling the Court which passed the decree to issue a precept to any other Court to attach property of the judgment dehtor pending execution in the ordinary course Beyond this they stated they felt they could not safely go With this exception, therefore, the general system of execution viz, by the Court passing the decree or by transfer has been maintained

The section provides that a decree may be executed by the Court which passed it, and it was held that where a Court passed a decree for sale of property, and the place where such property was situate was transferred to the jurisdiction of another Court, the former Court might still execute the decree (1) It has been held that the provisions of this section read with those of the next section plainly indicate that as a general rule (to which there are sundry exceptions) no Court can execute a decree in which the subject matter of the suit or of the application for execution is property entirely outside its local jurisdiction (2)

39 (1) The Court which passed a decree may, on the application of the decree-holder, send it for execution to another Court.—

(a) if the person against whom the decree is passed actually and voluntarily resides or carries on business, of personally works for gain, within the local limits of

(b) if such person has not property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree, sufficient to satisfy such decree and has property within the local limits of the jurisdiction of such other Court, or

(c) if the decree directs the sale or delivery of immoveable property situate outside the local limits of the jurisdiction of the Court which passed it, or

(d) if the Court which passed the decree considers for any other reason, which it shall record in writing, that the decree should be executed by such other Court.

- (2) The Court which passed a decree may of its own motion send it for execution to any subordinate Court of competent jurisdiction.
- 40. Where a decree is sent for execution in another province,

 Transfer of decree to court in another province, it shall be sent to such Court and executed in court in another province.

 Transfer of decree is sent for execution in another province, it shall be sent to such Court and executed in force in that province.
- 41. The Court to which a decree is sent for execution shall [s. Result of execution proceedings to be certify to the Court which passed it the fact of such execution, or where the former Court fails to execute the same the circumstances attending such failure.

Transfer of decree.-As sect 38 embodies the first paragraph of sect 223 of the last Code, sect 39 embodies the second and third paragraphs, sect 41 the fourth paragraph, and O XXI rr 4 and 5 the fifth and concluding paragraphs of that section See notes to sects 36-38, ante, and to the last-mentioned rules in O XXI, post To make the provisions relating to the transmission of decrees applicable, it is necessary that the provisions of the Code should regulate the procedure of both the Courts (1) Where a decree has been transferred by a Court which passed it to another Court for execution, the original Court, it has been held, does not thereby completely lose all jurisdiction in respect of execution thereof (2) As to orders sending certificates for execution under the Public Demands Recovery Act, see case cited (3) Where in different districts different modes of execution are prescribed, and where the question is how a decree passed in one, but of which execution is sought in another of such districts, is to be executed, the executing Court must be guided by the rules in force in its own district (1) It has been held under sect 233 of the last Code that an application for transfer of decree is an application to take a step in aid of execution within the meaning of Art 182 of the Limitation Act of 1908 (5)

42 The Court executing a decree sent to it shall have

Powers of Court in executing such decree as the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same passed by itself. All persons disobeying or obstructing the execution of the decree shall be punishable by such Court in the same manner as if it had passed the decree. And its order in executing such decree shall be subject to the same rules in respect of appeal as if the decree had been passed by itself.

Limitation of Powers—The powers of a Court are subject to other sections of the Code, which may affect them. So the section corresponding to this in the Code of 1882 was held subject to the special provisions of the section corresponding to O XXI r 16 post (1) Under the Code of 1882, the Court to which the decree was sent was, by virtue of the provisions of sect 225 (now O XXI r 7), held cuttled to enquire into the jurisdiction of the Court which passed the decree (2) And if the Court to which the decree was sent held that there was no jurisdiction, then its lands were stayed and the parties had to go back to the Court which passed the decree, the Court to which the decree was sent having declined to become the executing Court within the

of the decree was baried by limitation or not, (4) but not where a Court made an order for execution of the decree and then transmitted it (5). It has been held that an order for the transmission of a decree for execution to another Court is not an order for the execution of the decree, nor is the application for the transmission an application for execution (6).

As illustrations of the limitation on its powers, the following decisions under the earlier Codes may be referred to as being in force under this Code. The executing Court cannot question the validity of the decree or any portion of it. Its duty is to enforce it and not to determine whether it was illegal.

latter may object that the decree sought to be executed is not the decree of the Court to be executed (1)

"Same powers"—While the functions of an executing Court are confined to effecting execution, and to matters arising out of the proceedings in execution (2) and are subject to the limitations above mentioned they are judicial and not merely ministerial functions (3) So a Court to which a decree has been sent has jover to make orders in execution of the decree to deal with obstruction to execution, to investigate claims of third parties to attached property, and the like—It may generally be stated that the Court to which a decree is sent has the same power as those which were possessed by a Court to which a decree was transferred for execution under the Code of 1882

Execution of decrees pasted by a Civil Court established in any Execution of decrees part of British India to which the provisions in places to which this relating to execution do not extend, or by any foreign territory of the Governor General in Council in the territories of any foreign Plince or State, may, if it cannot be executed within the jurisdiction of the Court by which it was passed, be executed in manner herein provided within the jurisdiction of any Court in British India

"May be executed."—This section, it was held, did not remove the decree of a Native State falling within its purview from the category of foreign judgments. A Court in British India, though it may, is not bound to, execute the foreign decree, and will not do so if it is shown to have been without jurisdiction or obtained by fiaud (1). The judgment of a foreign Court on a decree obtained in British India is no bar to the execution of the original decree (2). As to foreign judgments generally, see sects 11-13, onte. proof (3)

45. So much of the foregoing sections of this Partis.

Execution of decrees as empowers a Court to send a decree labeled territory.

for execution to another Court shall be construed as empowering a Court in British India to send a decree for execution to any Court established or continued by the authority of the Governor General in Council in the territories of any foreign Prince or State to which the Governor General in Council has, by notification in the Gazette of India, declared this section to apply.

Execution of decrees in foreign territory.—This section was inscrted in the Codo of 1882 by sect 24, Act VII of 1888. The tributary Mohals of Orissa do not form part of British India, and therefore in the absence of a prior notification in the India Gazetto as specified in this section, it was held that no decree by a Court in British India could be sent for execution into a territory such as Mayoorbbuny which is a tributary Mahal (5). An instance of a Court "established or continued" within the measuring of this section is the Court of the Political Agent at Sikkim (6).

not the representative of a party, such question shall, for the purposes of this section, be determined by the Court.

Explanation.—For the purposes of this section, a plaintiff whose suit has been dismissed and a defendant against whom a suit has been dismissed, are parties to the suit.

History and Scope of Section.—The provisions of this important [section are designed to prevent multiplicity of suits and to secure that all matters which can be decided in the suit should be se decided. The subject-matter has heen repeatedly considered hoth by the Legislature since it was first statutorily dealt with in sect. 11, Act XXIII of 1801, amending the Code of 1859, as also by the Courts, which have given numerous and often cenflicting decisions on points which have arisen with reference to it. The tendency hoth of the Legislature and, on the whole, of the Courts has been te enlarge as much as possible the scope of the proceedings before Ceurts charged with the execution of the decree. With this view the statutory law has been amended from time to time. Sect. 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, which referred expressly only to parties and not representatives, and not to discharge, satisfaction or stev, ran as follows.—

"All questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits which by the terms of the decree may have heen reserved for adjustment in the execution of the decree, or of any mesne profits or interest which may he payable in respect of the subject-matter of a suit hetween the date of the institution of the suit and execution of the decree, as well as questions relating to sums alleged to have been paid in discharge or satisfaction of the decree or the like, and any other questions arising between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed and relating to the execution of the decree, shall be determined by order of the Court executing the decree and not by separate suit, and the order passed by the Court shall be open to appeal "

This enactment was fellowed by the Code of 1877 (Act X) This Code expressly referred to representatives, and was in its terms the same as those of the Code of 1882, as the latter was first published, except that the words "discharge" and "satisfaction" appeared for the first time in the Code of 1882 (Act XIV) The latter Code was amended by Act VII of 1888 Sect 26 of that amending Act substituted a new clause (c) for that which appeared in sect 244.of that Code prior to this amendment. The amended clause (c) included cases of stay of execution as to which there had been some difference of opinion whether, as suspending execution, it was a matter relating to execution Act VII of 1888 also added the last clause of sect 244 of the former Code which corresponds with subsection (3) of the present Code Though the latter has been amended.

It will be observed that the present Code effects several amendments. In the first place clause (a) of sect 241 of the last Code has not been remarked. That clause ran (a) "questions regarding the amount of any mesne profits as to which the decree has directed unquiry. All reference to mesne profits has now been omitted. This omission is due to the recognition of the principle that inquiries into the amount of mesne profits are properly not a matter for the execution department but should be treated as an integral is anything due on it, (1) questions as to part satisfaction of a decree (2) Suit by judgment debtor against auction purchaser to recover property sold in execution, on the ground that being a tenant's right it is not saleable (3) When a prior mortgageo has been made a party in a puisne mortgagee's suit, and the puisne mortgagee has obtained a decree for sale on his mortgage, the pror mortgagee can have his rights settled in execution-proceedings by an application under this section (4)

What a decree means is a question relating to execution, and a suit therefore which asks the Court to construe a decree and ascertain plaintiff's rights is baired, notwithstanding that other parties against whom no relief is claimed are added (5). So also is an objection to a partition made by a Collector, (6) an order refusing a representative of a deceased decree holder his claim to continue the execution proceedings, (7) an order declining to enlarge the time fixed for redemption (8)

It is to be observed (and this is not always understood) that an order may be, none the less, an order under this section because it is also passed under some other of the sections of the Codo relating to the execution of decrees. So orders under the following sections of the last Codo have been held to be also orders under sect. 224 of that Codo corresponding with the present section —sects 318 and 334, (9) sect. 310 1, (10) sect. 287, clause (8), (11) sect. 294, clause (2), (12) sect. 294, last clause, (13) sect. 243, (14) sects. 332, 234 (15). In such cases the matter is one ordinarily and from the nature of the case relating to execution within the meaning of this section. If it is further one between the pairtes

A case is not within the section if it is a question which does not relate to, and is not directly connected with, the execution of the decree, even though hetween the same partness(4) that is, if it is not a question in respect to the furtherance of or hindrance to or the manner of carrying out the execution of the decree, (5) or does not arise between the parties to the suit in which the order was passed. (6) or its a question whole cannot he properly determined in execution, (7) or if it is an order not in execution, such as an interlocutory order pending suit appointing a commission to make partition subsequently to a prehimmary decree (8) or if it indirectly and remotely relates to the execution of the decree, (9) or the decree has been satisfied, (10) or if an order is made not in execution of decree but after execution and when such proceedings have come to an end, (11) or the question is one not under but outside the decree, such as assessment of damages for excessive execution, (12) or for damages for injury to property after it had vested in him on the confirmation of the sale (13)

The section does not apply where the decree has passed beyond the stage of execution and the Court is functus office. So it does not apply to a suit by one of two judgment-debtors who has been compelled to satisfy the decree against the other judgment debtor for contribution, (14) nor where a person

This rule was, of course, subject to this, that the other conditions of the section existed, viz, that the question was one arising between the parties to the suit or their representatives. So it was held that as between a party to the suit and a stranger, the provisions of sect 312 of the former Code did not debar the person aggreeved from instituting a suit, if he could establish that a material error in the sale had its origin not in mere irregularity but in fraud (1) So also in the under-mentioned case, (2) while the suit was held to be barred as regards those plaintiffs who were parties to the suit the sale in which was sought to be set aside, it was held to lie at the instance of the other plaintiffs who had been no parties to such suit.

It was held that when a decree or purchase was made benami, sect 244 did not apply, and a suit would he, as the section could not be applied on the footing that the persons really interested were parties to the proceeding (3) and that the auction purchaser could not be regarded as a party to the suit (4) Though this case was not referred to, it must be taken on this latter point to have been overruled (5) by the decision of the Privy Council, that when a question relating to execution has arisen between the parties to the suit in which the decree was passed, the fact that the purchaser, who is not party to the suit, is interested in the result is not a bar to the application of the section (6) A judgment-debtor was held entitled by an application under seet 244 to have an execution sale of his properties set aside if he alleged and proved fraud on the part of the decree holder, though no fraud was alleged or proved against the auction-purchaser, who was a stranger to the suit. The auction-purchaser was of course entitled to have the purchase money paid by him refunded by the decree-holder When during the pendency of an application under sect 244 to set aside a sale the sale in confirmed, such confirmation was held to be no bar to the maintenance of the application even though the auction purchaser was a stranger to the suit (7)

An appleation to set aside a sale on the ground of fraud may be made even after the sale has been confirmed (1)

Where a judgment dehter applies to have an execution sale set aside and alleges circumstances which, if found in his favour, would amount to fraud on the part of the decree holder or auction purchaser the application was held to come under sect 244, something more being alleged than a material irregularity in publishing or conducting the sale within the meaning of sect 311 of the last Code (2) But a mere allegation of fraud without any attempt to substitution to was insufficient (3)

In order, however, to determine whether a case in which fraud is alleged comes within this section or may be made the subject of a separate suit, it is necessary, apart from any other conditions annexed to the section, to accertain whether it is the decree or the execution proceedings under the decree which are alleged to be fraudulent. Proceedings under this section presuppose the existence of a valid and binding decree (4). The section was held not to apply to a case where the judgment debtor tried to set aside the effect of a decree, but it referred to proceedings in execution based on the decree as if it were perfectly good and vahid (5). Under this section the questions to be decided in execution are questions relating to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree. A question whether the decree itself was obtained by fraud or collusion was held not to be one which relates to the execution, discharge, or satisfaction of the decree, but which affects its very subsistence and vability (6). The question whether the decree sought to be executed was obtained by fraud.

At one time it was not clearly under stood that after a decree had been fully executed the Court could re open the matter under s 244 and set aside a sale already con firmed, but the law was subsequently settled as stated in the text, that an at plication lay under s. 244 whether before or after confirms tion of the sale, see Jagan Nath Gorai : Watson & Co , 19 C 311 at p. 311 (1892), and was thus held not to be within the scope of seet 244 (1) and could only be raised hy a separate suit (2) When, therefore, both the decree and in consequence the sale thereunder were impeached on the ground of fraud, the remedy lay by separate suit (3) But, as already stated, if the decree was not impeached for fraud but only the execution proceedings thereunder, the question had to be raised in those proceedings and a separate suit would not be An objection, therefore, to a sale of property in execution of a decree on the ground of fraud is a question to be determined exclusively under this section, even though the purchaser was no party to the decree

"Court executing the decree "-That is, either the Court which passed the decree or the Court to which the decree has been transferred The provisions of this section govern the procedure of both such Courts (4) The words must be interpreted to moan the Court executing the decree at the time when the application is made, and they do not include the Court which has executed the decree and has thereby become functus officio (5) The section is limited to Courts executing the decree, and therefore an order refusing to stay execution by a Court which is not executing the decreo is not appealable (6)

"And not by separate suit"-A separate suit ought not to be insti tuted unless all questions between the parties or their representatives cannot bo decided in the original suit, (7) and all questions which can possibly he deter mined in the execution proceedings should be so determined (8) The existence however, of a decree cannot bar a fresh suit between the parties in respect of rights which cannot he worked out without additions to the decree which the Court of execution has no power to make (9) granted which interferes with the conduct of the execution proceedings of the Court executing a decree (1). In considering whether the scope of any suit coince, within the section, regard must be bad both to the cause of action and the rehe claimed. Thus the question of an uncertified adjustment may be a matter relating to execution, and no suit is permissible which has as its object to restrain the execution of the decree on this ground, but it may be that a suit would he for other rehef which had as its subject-matter such uncertified adjustment (2). Further, this section differs from sect. It which bars the trial of an issue. This section bars a suit brought for the determination of certain questions specified therein, but does not bar the trial of any issue involved in those questions if the issue is raised at the instance of a defendant in a suit brought against him (3). Where theorecution proceedings are closed, a separate suit will he, as the section is then no longer applicable (4).

"Arising."—It has been said (5) that this word should be read as "directly arising," otherwise the most remote enquiries would be possible in the execution department. Probably, however, it is best not to import words into the section and to determine in each case whether a question does arise which is dealt with by this section.

The following considerations establish that for the purposes of this section an objection made by a party to the decree or his representative against whom execution is applied for to the effect that property is held by him by a right or title not rendering it hable to attachment in execution of such decree, is a question arising between the parties. The provision formerly in force corresponding to sect 244, namely, sect 11 of Act XXIII of 1861, was bruted in its operation to questions arising between parties to the suit, and the question arcse whether the term "parties" applied to persons who had not been made parties before decree but against whom execution was sought as herrs of the judgment-debter upon his death after decree In the last Code the words " or their representatives" were added and applied to persons against whom, or against the property in whose hands, execution was sought, on the ground that they were the heirs of a judgment debtor who has died after decree As regards the kind of questions intended in sect 244 of that Code the matter was fairly elear from the provisions of seet 234 Under that section (now 50) the representative could have been made hable "to the extent of the property of the deceased which has come to his hands and has not been duly disposed of " So that two kinds of property could be attached First property of the ancestor found in the hands of the heir, second the property of the heir, from whatever source derived to the extent to which ho bad wasted the assets that had descended to him without satisfying the debts of the deceased. Where property is said to be hable to execution in the hands of heirs as assets inherited from their aucestor, in such a case the question that ordinarily arises is whether the property has so descended or not. That is a question in which the parties interested are the judgment-creditor on one side and the alleged heir himself ou the other. The persons interested would be the same if the property against which execution was sought were the property of the heir himself which it was sought to charge on the ground of his having wasted the inherited assets. The provision in the former seet 234 for taking an account made this plain

An examination of the decisions led to the same result. The eases fell into two classes. The first class consisted of cases in which a person is originally made a party in a representative capacity, or is subsequently made a party in consequence of the death of an original party before decree In this case it was clearly settled that such a person was a party to the suit within the meaning of sect 244, and that a question between bim and the decree helder, as to whether property had come to him as the representative of the judgment debtor, and so was hable to be taken in execution of the decree against him as such iopresentative of on the other hand belonged to himself alone and not in such representative character, was one that must be decided in the execution proceedings, and not by suit. The governing authority on the subject was the decision of the Privy Council in Chowdry Wahed Ah v Jumace, (1) and it was followed and applied in the sense indi cated in several subsequent cases in this country (2) The second class of cases consisted of those in which the representatives had not been made parties to the suit before decree, but in which, in consequence of the death of the judgment debtor after decree, a question alose as to the rights of the decree holder to execute the decree against the representatives or the property said to have descended to them Under Act XXIII of 1861 it was held, both by the Madras (3) and Calcutta (4) High Courts, that representatives proceeded against in execution of a decree against the person they represented were parties to the suit within the meaning of the section corresponding to sect 211 of the last Code That question no longer arose under the Code of 1882, hecause in sect 214 of that Code the representatives were expressly mentioned In both of those eases and in a series of subsequent cases it was held in accordance with the analogy of the other class of decisions aheady mentioned that questions arising between a decree holder and the representatives of the judgment debtor as to whether property had come to the representatives as such, and so was hable to be taken in execution, or was their own property derived from any other source, and therefore not so hable must be decided in the execution proceeding and not by sut (5) There were other eases in which the decisions turned upon considerations which did not apply to the case mentioned. They were cases in which it was held that a claim either by the judgment debtor or by his representatives to property attached in execution, made not in his own right but as a trustee,(1) did not fall within sect. 211 of the list Code (2)

Two propositions were then established under the previous case law firstly, that where in execution of a deered for a deht due by n deceased person, property in the hands of his representative was intached, a claim by the representative to have the property released on the ground that it was his own private property fell not within sect 278 of the last Code but within the section corresponding to this (3). Secondly, however, if the judgment-debtor objected to attachment, not on the ground that it property was his private property but set up a justeriu, namely, the right of third parties not hefore the Court as parties to the saut or their representatives, then the matter fell within sect 278 of the last Code and not this section (1). This where the judgment debtor alleged that he was in possession only as shebut of a deity to whom the property had been dedicated, it was held that the case fell within sect 278 read with sect 280 of the last Code, and not within sect 214 of that Code, now represented by this section (5)

Questions arising between whom —Questions may possibly also between a party on one side and a party on the other side, or between a party on one side and the representative (i.e. heir, executor, administrator or transferred within the meaning of the term hereafter stated) of a party on the other side, or between a party or his representative.

The words " parties to the suit" are not now himted to judgment ereditors and judgment dobtors (5) The case of rival decree bolders has been held not to be within the section, (6) nor a third party objecting to the sale of attached property, (7) nor is a person who becomes a surety for the appearance of a party himself a party to the suit (8) In an order made under an appheation under O XXXIII r 12 for payment under O XXXIII r 10 or 11, Government is deemed to be a party to the suit, and such an order is therefore under this section and appealable (9)

The Official Assignee is the representative of an insolvent debtor within the meaning of this section. an heir, devisee, executor, or administrator of a party, or more strictly the last two persons only (I) But a person it was held might be representative within the meaning of this section who is not a legal representative in the sense stated (2) The Courts in India did not confine the term to its primary meaning of executor or administrator, but have included heirs, executors before probate, persons in possession of property of the deceased (3) and persons taking joint property by survivorship (4) A further extension was given to the term so as to include representatives in interest, such as assignees from a mortgager of mortgaged property in proceedings for the execution of a decree against the mortgagor for sale of the mortgaged property (5) It was held in an early case (6) under the Codo of 1882 that the word "representative" meant only persons who succeeded to the rights of any of the parties to the suit after the decree was passed. In this case it was held that Run Bahadur was (a) not a legal representative as he inherited not from Rance Asmedh Koci but from ber husband, (7) (b) that he was not a representative under sect 244 because the transfer to him was not after decree, (c) that he was not a party as the suit was dismissed as against him This latter ground would not now be sustainable by reason of the Explanation As regards the second ground, it is to be observed that the Ekrarnama referred to was not merely before deeree but before the suit. It is, bowever, incorrect now to say that only those who take the interests of parties after decree are representatives. A person who is a transferce within the meaning of the cases cited is equally such whether the transfer took place pending the suit before decree or after decree (8) There is no distinction between the position of legal representatives added to the suit before and those added after decree (9) A person attaching decree is representative of decree-

holder (10)

For the purposes of this section, the word "representative" when used in relation to a party includes the transferce of any interest who so far

(7) Purmessureo Pershad t Jankee Koer, supra Aziznddin Hossein v Ramanugra Roy supra, see also khoda Bux t Sadu 14 C L J 620 (1910) Court has therefore considered and treated a planut under the circumstances stated as an application in execution (1) The Legislature has now sanctioned this practice both as regards suits which should have been applications, as also in the converse case.

Where an appeal was erroneously presented to the High Court as a first appeal from an order it refused to convert it into a first appeal from a decree under this section in the old Code road with sect 2 of that Code (2). Where a suit was barred under the provisions of this section but the order of the Court executing the decree was erroneous, the High Court suggested that the latter Court should review its order (3)

Sub section (3),-This sub section corresponds, with amendments, with the last clause of sect 244 of the Code of 1882, which was added to that Code hy Act VII of 1888 The Court executing a decree can go into the disputed question of the transfer of the decree (4) Indeed, the question whether a person is a representative must be decided under this section and not hy separate suit (5) The sub-section refers to a case where there is a dispute between two or more persons as to which of these is the representative of a person who had been a party to the suit. It does not include a case in which there could be no representativo as there was no party to be represented (6) Nor can an application by the assignee of an auction purchaser to he placed on the record be dealt with under this section, as the expression "representative" does not mean the representative of a party to the execution proceedings, but of a party to the suit (7) It was held by the Madras High Court that the amendment noted did not take away tho right of suit at the instance of an assignee of a decree for a declaration as to the validity of his assignment, it heing said to he unreasonable to construo tho phrase "and not by a separate suit" as applicable to the question referred to in the amondment (8) Tho sub section has been amended so as to make it compulsory on the Court to determine the question of representation See anle, "History and scope of section "

In appeal heaven in a case in which the question is not between the parties to the suit or their representatives, but only between the decree holder and a person eluming as his assigned (1). The effect of this sub-section is to give the right of appeal against an order determining whether a party applying for execution is or is not the representative of the decree holder (2).

A Judge who stayed execution proceedings, pending a suit in which an issue had been ruse I as to the validity of a will under which the applicant for execution claumed, was held entitled to act months determination of that issue in the execution proceedings (3)

The Code contains no provisions under which a representative of a deceased decree holder can have his name entered on the record when nothing remains to be done under the decree beyond its execution, nor is there any necessity for any such entry, as proceedings in execution do not abate on the judgment creditor's death, and his representatives are entitled to continue them (4).

Explanation,—This Explanation has been added to remove a conflict of decisions under the last Code. It was held by the Calcutta [6] and Allaha bad [6]. High Courts that persons who were exempted from the operation of a decree, by the dismissal, as respects them, of the suit, were theneforth strangers and not parties to the suit and therefore no longer subject to the section. It was considered that as between the party exemerated and the decree holder, no question relating to execution could arise, because as against him there was no decree to be executed. The Madras [7] and Bombay [8] High Courts, however, held on the contrary that a person was a party to an action, although he might have ceased to have any connection with the suit before the decree was passed and would still come under that clause.

The Legislature by this Explanation has now adopted the latter view.

⁽S) Gours v Vigueshwar, 17 B 49 (1892) [party to suit though not to appeal]

Appeal—The object of the section being that the Court having the patties (and other persons interested) before it, should decide all questions relating to execution arising between them, in place of allowing one or the other of them to put his adversary to the delay and eost of a separate suit in cases in which, but for this section, it might be possible for him to do so, in order to effect this object completely, without injustice to the parties, an order under this section has been included within the definition of decree in sect 2 of the Code (1)

In order to determine whether an appeal hes, it must he first ascertained whether the case is one which falls within the section. In the first place, the order complained of must he one made by a Court executing a decree (2). If so, the question determined by it must be one relating to execution. If it is not, then, unless an appeal is elsewhere expressly given, there is none (3). In the first place, there is a distinction between acts done in pursuance of a decree and acts done in execution of it. So an order passed in a suit for partition subsequent to the decree appointing a commission to make the partition is not an order in execution (4).

There is no appeal from an order not relating to the enforcement of a decree, such as an order of a Judge confirming the report of the commissioner for taking accounts refusing to require the defendants to give inspection of certain books for such an order is not within the contemplation of the section (5). Nor is an order appealable which is a mere ministerial act such as a direction to a sub-ordinate officer to receive money, there being no question in controvers; finally determined (6). There is no appeal if the matter is one indirectly and remotely relating to the execution of the decree (7). But though the property may not be the subject of the decree, if it has been interfered with in execution to matter relates to execution (8). Where an order absolute for sale or foreclosure of mortgaged property has been made, any question that a uses as to that order has been held not to relate to execution of the decree (9). Nor is there an appear against an order made when no question arises in execution of decree, the decree

The former section referred only to decrees for the payment of money (3) or delivery of other property. A decice for the sale of mort Saged property was held not to be a decree for the payment of money, even though the judgment-delitor was personally hable for the deficiency (1). neceived by him or taken into his disposition (1) When an application is made under this section the Court should, under O. XXI i 21, issue notice on the person named calling upon him to show cause why the decree should not be ovecuted against him as such representative. If he demes that he is so, the Court which passes a decree decides whether the person against whom execution is sought is the legal representative, though it is for the Court executing the decree to decide to what extent such person is hable (2). The decree holder should show that property of the deceased has come into the possession of his representative, and it is then on the latter to show that he has properly applied the property (3). The heirs are highlen in respect of assets even though it may be pleaded that the dehter was a benamidar (1). The right of the decree holder to have his delit paid out of the assets of the deceased in the hands of the legal representative is not affected by the provisions of sect. 104 of the Probate and Administration Act (5).

Legal representative —The last Code did not contain any definition of the term "legal representative". The framers of the former section in using this term must either have understood it in some defined sense, or have intended thereby morely to refer to such persons as, under the law applicable to the particular case, might be held to be the legal representatives of a deceased person. The first supposition was negatived by the fact that the Legislatus omitted to declare what were the characteristics of a legal representative for the purposes of this section (6). It might have been said that such a definition was unnecessary, as the term has a well known technical meaning. In their strictest and most ordinary sense the words "legal representatives" are under stood to mean executors and administrators only (7).

Though the decisions upon the construction of wills which hold it to be a flexible term and have given it another sense, such as next of kin or descendants, do not control its legal meaning in that they proceed upon this principle that if the Court finds that a testator attached to particular words a different meaning from that which is their proper legal sense, the Court is bound so to construe and give effect to the will, not in its strict legal sense, but in the way in which the testator himself used the words (8) the term is yet one which is naturally capable of a more extended sense than that in which it is ordinarily and strictly employed. Had the Legislature, therefore, intended to confine it to particular persons only, viz, executors or administrators, it would have expressly named these persons and would not have used a term which, though in its most strict sense denoting executor or administrator only, is yet capable.

of a wider meaning. Where there is an executor or administrator, they alone are the legal representatives of a deceased judgment debtor (1). But the section is also commonly applied, both in the case of heirs (2) as well as in that of executors and administrators, and the term "legal representative" has been defined to ordinarily mean all these classes of persons (3).

When there is no executor or administrator, but succession by heirship as in cases governed by the Bengal School of Hindu Law, or in cases of separate and self acquired property under Mitakshara Law, the decree must be executed against the heir as the legal representative within the meaning of this section (4) The section has, however, been applied to cases where the succession is otherwise than by heirship to the last holder of an estate, as also to cases where the estate accrues to the present holder by survivorship (5) In these cases where a decree is passed against a judgment-debtor not in his or her personal capacity, but in a representative capacity, the decree may be executed ogainst the person who, though not an heir of the judgment debtor. tho last holder of the estato, is entitled thereto after his or her death whether os reversioner or surviving eo parcener (6) So masmuch os o decreo properly obtained ogainst a Hindu widow in her representative capacity is binding upon her husbond a roversioner, (7) where a suit has been instituted or defended by a Hindu widow in her representative capacity, the reversioners though they do not claim through her but as heirs of her husband, have yet been held to be her legal representatives in respect of the estate held by her as such Hindu widow (8) Again in the case of a joint Hindu formily governed by the Virtakshore, though it has been held by the Madras and Allahabad and formerly by the Calcutta,(1) High Courts, that in the case of a personal decree for money obtained against the father the interest of the latter in the joint ancestral properties is not assets in the hand of the son when he dies and consequently, notwith standing his obligation tu pay his father's debt proceedings cannot be taken agrunst him under this section as the legal representative of his father the contrary view has been adopted by the Bombay High Court in that the obligation of a son to satisfy his father's dolt is within the scope of the decree against the father whether on the ground of representation of the sons by their father,(2) or on the ground that the creditor has the power to attach and sell the entire interest in the property in execution proceedings against the father, (3) and the Calcutta High Court has recently held that the hability may be determined on the execution proceedings if the legal representative has been properly brought on the record under this section (4) This question is now settled by sect 53 Where moreover the interest of the father has been attached during his lifetime (5) or a decree directing a sale of hypothecated property has been passed in the lifetime of the judgment debtor, (6) or the judgment debtor has been expressly sued as representing the undivided family (7) or the decree charges the family property , (8) in all these eases the decree, it has been held, may be executed against those who in succession, in time, take by the legal title of survivorship and not by that of heirship

The principle under consideration has been still further extended to the case of a person who without title as administrator, executor, heir reversioner or surviving co parcener is the de facto possessor of the estato of a deceared Hindu it having been held that he must be treated for some purposes as his representative and that a judgment obtained against such a representative in of a mere nullity (9) The first of these cases proceeds upon the assumption that under the law is it existed prior to 1881 the executor did not represent the deceased until he had obtained probate, and the hardship in the particular case which led the Court to take the view it did, no longer exists Madras High Court has more recently held that there is no authority for bolding that the words "legal representative" include any person who has taken possession of the property of a deceased judgment debtor, and that a stranger in possession of property who was not a party to the decree ought not to be proceeded against in execution or otherwise than by a regular suit, and that the words "legal representative" cannot be taken to include any person who does not in law represent the estate of the deceased (1) And though in the two former cases the question arose with reference to a suit brought by the creditor against the representative, and not with reference to proceedings taken in execution of a decree, the Calcutta High Court has expressed an opinion that the principle underlying the observations in these eases are equally applicable to proceedings in execution as to proceedings by regular suit (2)

From this review of the authorities it will appear that judicial decisions prior to this Code extended the sense of the term 'legal representative' beyond that of its ordinary meaning of "administrator, executor and heir" and though such extension has been attended with doubt and his in some cases been the subject of conflicting decisions, it was too late to endeavour however convenient it might have been to secure for the term that which is perhaps its strict and legitimate sense. The term was therefore not himited to administrators executors and heirs, and must have been held to include any person who in law represented the estate of a deceased judgment-debtor (3). And the term has now been so

defined in sect 2, clause (11)

A decree passed against the Valiya Rajah of a Korilagom is primu face linding on his successor and his Koulagom (4). The successor to an unsettled polition is not hable for the debts of the person whose heir he is as respects that polition. The polition recents absolutely to the Government and by the fresh grant to the successor a newly created estate for his becomes vested in him (5). In the undermentioned case an impartible Raj in the possession of the respondent was held not to be assets of the deceased nor was he the legal representative of the deceased (6) and a decree against a limited company representative of the deceased against another company (7). A decree containing an injunction can be enforced against a legal representative under this section (8)

Execution has been allowed under this section against the legal representative of the legal representative (1)

There may be an estoppel Thus, though ordinarily a Court has no power to put a delitor's vendee on the record (2) where a person filed a petition in a suit, saying that all the property of the judgment debtor had passed to him and for several years opposed execution, it was held that though his name was not on the record he had yet made himself hable as a defendant (3) The legal representative hinds ill property in his possession and where an adult legal representative was in possession a salo was held good and not affected by the

non appointment of a guardian ad litem (4)

The Code of 1859 gave power to execute a decree against the estate of a deceased judgment delitor A proposal to revive this provision having been excepted to the criticisms were met by a further proposal to give a remedy against the person in possession of the estate. As already stated in the last paragraph it was formerly a question whether the term legal representative in sect 239 of the last Code included a stranger who, not being a party to the decree was in possession of the property of the deceased. It was held (5) under the Code of 1809 and this appears to be law now, that if no other legal ropresontative can be found, the decree-holder may then proceed against persons in possession of the estate belonging to the deceased. The definition in sect 2 clause (11) includes a person intermeddling with the estate

It was proposed to enact that the death of a judgment debtor before the decree had been fully executed should not be deemed to affect the validity as against such legal representative of any proceeding lawfully takon during his lifetime Where property has actually been sold by order of the Court executing the decree probably no difficulty arises. This clause was however, thought at one time to be necessary to meet the case of a Judgment debtor dying before the salo is effected (6) It has not, however been introduced

PROCEDURE IN EXECUTION

Subject to such conditions and limitations as may be prescribed the Court may, on the application of Powers of Court to the decree holder, order execution of the decreeenforce execution

(a) by delivery of any property specifically decreed, (b) by attachment and sale or by sale without attachment of any property,

(c) by arrest and detention in prison of any person,

(d) by appointing a receiver, or (e) in such other manner as the nature of the relief granted may require

Enforcement of decree against legal representative.

(1) Where a decree is passed against a party as the is legal representative of a deceased person, and the decree is for the payment of money out of the property of the deceased, it may be executed by the attachment and sale of any such property. (2) Where no such property remains in the possession of the judgment-dehtor and he fails to satisfy the Court that he has duly apphed such property of the deceased as is proved to have come into his possession, the deeree may he executed against the judgment dehtor to the extent of the property in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court in the same manner as if the decree had been against him personally.

Decrees against legal representatives -This section corresponds with sect 203 of Act VIII of 1859 eave for some slight verhal alterations and the substitution of the words " remains in the possession of the judgment debtor and he" by $ 252, Act XIV of 1882, for the words "can be found and the judgment deltor" of the Codo of 1859, and the words " in respect of which he has failed so to satisfy the Court" hy the present Code for the words "not duly applied by him" proviously appearing The Code of 1859 also had a section (211) providing tho same procedure where the decree was ordered to be executed against the legal representativo

"Where a decree is passed "-A decree passed against a person already dead, cannot however, he executed against his legal representatives (1) "Legal representative of the deceased "-This includes persons who have been legal representatives in execution proceedings, (2) and the heir of an intestate (3) A person taking possession of the estate of a deceased Hindu leaving a will may be treated as the legal representative until Probate is taken, (1)

Where a Hindu widow is such as such and as guardian of her son and a decree obtained against her as her husband's representative, the sale in execution of property includes the son's interest therein,(1) as also where the son was an adopted son, (2) but where the widow in the plaint was described as the widow of A deceased and the mother of D and B minors, and the decree (on a hond due hy her husband) was against her personally it was held the sale of the minor's property was invalid (3) So also where a Hindu defendant died leaving a widow and a minor son and the suit was continued against the widow not as guardian of her son, and after the widow's death, against the sister of the deceased though not appointed guardian ad litem of the minor or administrator of his estate, the minor son was not hound (4) So where a widow horrowed not as administrator and without pledging any specific pro perty of the estate, it was held to he her personal debt. (5) that is so where the debt is for reut,(6) but not where it was for necessary repairs (7) Where, however, the mother of the deceased obtained a personal decree against his widow for maintenance payable after his death, only the widow's interest in the estate of the deceased could be sold in execution (8) The test as to whether a decree against a Hindu widow binds the reversioners is whether the cause of action was one personal to her or one affecting the estate of the re versioner, (9) and the question must be decided from the decree and the execution record (10)

As to Mahomedans, a decree against one of the hens cannot hind the other heirs, (11) and a decree by consent against some of the heirs for a debt due by the deceased only binds those who are parties (12). [This is not so in the case of Hindus (13)]. A sale under a decree against a Mahomedan daughter, who though sued as representative, did not represent the whole estate, there heing a widow and another daughter, carried only the share of the judgment debtor, (14) so also a Mahomedan daughter is not bound by a decree made against the widow of her father in respect of his debts or by a subsequent sale by the widows to the judgment creditor but could only recover her share of the property on payment of her share of her father's debts, (15) Mahomedan

"Any such property"-Under a decice on a bond against the widow of the deceased ohligor, I Hindu, the property of the debtor, described as the property of the widow, was sold, and it was held that the sale was good against the son and heir of the deceased, (1) so, where property is described at the tuno of the execution sale as the property of the judgment debtors, who were sund as more representatives of the deceased judgment debtor, prim i facie what is sold is the property of the deceased debtor, and even if the decree is in terms is if it were a personal decree yet it must be construed as if it was for the debt of the deceased (2) But in a case where in the judgment, though not in the decree, the widow (who was only entitled to maintenance) was described as the representative of her deceased husband, the suit being for the husbands debt, the sale of her interest did not affect the deceased e estate (3) To ascer tain what was sold under the right title and interest of the widow the Court is at liberty to look at the judgment. If the judgment bound the lever sionary heir, the purchaser took the estate absolutely (4) Under a decree ignist a widow as representative of her deceased husband, a member of a joint Mitakshara family, property of the deceased passing by survivorship to the other members, cannot be sold (5) This confines the procedure to property romaining in the possession of the legal representative leaving the creditor to follow property improperly aliened by the legal representative by a separate suit (6) The onus of proving the legal necessity of a sale by a Hindu widow is on the purchaser, and recitals in mortgages or sale deeds are not sufficient ovidence (7) A Hindu widow can with the consent of the next inversioner transfer her inherited estate inter vivos, (8) though not by bequest (9)

"If no such property remains -The decree bolder must satisfy the Court as to this before the Court will proceed under the second clause of this section (10) If the legal representative has sold such property to a third party the former is personally hable for the debt to the extent of the assets he has received (11)

(3) Where a judgment-debtor is arrested in execution of a decree for the payment of money and brought before the Court, the Court shall inform him that he may apply to be declared an insolvent, and that he will be discharged if he has not committed any act of bad faith regarding the subject of the application and if he compiles with the provisions of the law of insolvency for the time being in force

(4) Where a judgment-debtor expresses his intention to apply to be declared an insolvent and furnishes security, to the satisfaction of the Court, that he will within one month so apply, and that he will appear, when called upon, in any proceeding upon the application or upon the deeree in execution of which he was arrested, the Court shall release him from arrest, and, if he fails so to apply and to appear, the Court may either direct the security to be realized or commit him to the and prison in execution of the deeree.

Arrest—This section corresponds with sect 336 of Act \(\lambda\) of 1877 save that the 2nd and 3rd provisos did not then appear. These provisors as also that the 2nd and 3rd provisos did not then appear. These provisors as also the words. In the case of a surety, such security may be realized in manner provided by sect 253," were added by sect 336 of Act XIV of 1882. In such Code the words in the first sub clause, "detention" "civil prison" and "detained," were expressed by "imprisonment" "civil pair or "jail" and "imprisond". The second proviso then commenced "no outer door of a divelling house shall be broken open; but". This has now been aftered as indicated in italies by the present Code, which substitutes "broken" for "furnish "The words in italies in the 3rd and 4th proviso and in the 2nd and 4th sub clauses have been added by the present Code, the words "furnishes security to the satisfaction of the Court" being substituted for "furnish sufficient security" to the third sub clause in the Codes of 1877 and 1882 was prefaced by "The Local Government may by notification published in the official Gazette, direct that whenever" instead of "Where," and ended with the words "places all his property in possession of a receiver appointed by the Court" instead of the words in stales—it also provided that the application to be declared an insolvent was to be "under Chapter XX". See now Provisional Insolvency Act III of 1907—The provision as to the method of realizing the security has been omitted, as it comes within the provisions of sect-115

"A judgment-debtor may be arrested"—A purdanasheen lady was not exempt from arrest (1) but see sect 56, which was introduced into the Code in 1888

"May be arrested'—The officer arresting a judgment debtor must have the warrant of triest in his possession at the time of making the appre housion, otherwise it is illegal (2). A decree against the hypothecated property and against the defendants personally, and containing no condition for execution first against the property, may be enforced against the person or the property of the judgment debtor, whichever the decree holder thinks best, (3) but a decree merely against mortgaged property and making no personal order for payment, cannot be executed against the person of the judgment debtor (4)

"On any day"—An airest may be made on Sunday under piecess of a Mofussil Court (5)

"In any other place"—A list of such places has been notafied for Burma (6) and also for Madras (7)

Sub clause (1), second provided—Under the former Lode an outer door could not be broken open. It was proposed to enact that if the judgment debtor or any person in whose dwelling house the officer authorized to make the arcest had reason to behave the judgment debtor was to be found, refused access to his house such officer might remove or open any lock or bolt and might break open any outer door. The amendments in this provise were suggested to provent vexatious forms of resistance to execution which constantly obstruct decree-holders in the execution of their decrees Afterwards, however, the amendment took its present form, the Select Committee stating that they had carefully considered the provisions as to breaking open dwelling houses, and that they had come to the conclusion that it should be limited to dwelling houses in the occupancy of the judgment debtor.

"Who is not the judgment debtor'—It was formerly held that no order was necessary to enter a zenana of a purdanasheen judgment debtor (8) but that decision was before sect 56 was included in the Code

The section after the Proviso corresponds (with verbal alterations) to sect 341 of the last Code omitting clause (1) of that section, which is no longer necessary owing to the remodelled form of the former sect 342 A prisoner once dis charged for want of depos t of subsistence-money should not be retaken (1) Where a per on is imprisoned under sect 481 (now O XXXVIII r 4), post, imprisonment suffered after decree must be taken into consideration in calculating the six months (2) On the expiration of the period, the prisoner is entitled to his discharge whether the imprisonment has been continuous or only at intervals (3) The imprisonment is not a satisfaction of the decree, and the debtor can be adjudicated an insolvent for it, (4) or his personal property miv be taken in execution under the same decree.(a) This section does not empower a Judge to us a term of imprisonment at his discretion within the maximum. If hone of the conditions mentioned in the provide are fulfilled before the exput of six months, or six weeks as the case may be, the judgmentdebtor remains in Jul the full time (6) The language of clause (1) has thus been recrest to show the this provision does not confer on the Court a discretion to fix shorter periods of imprisonment than those presembed. This section does not apply the a es of imprisonment for contempt of Court (7)

"One molety of the salary,"—That under the Code of 1883 was half the salary or leave allowance actually payable (3) but under the present Code it refers only to salary or allowance equal to salary while on duty. In a recent case it has been held that a salary is "property" of an insolvent within the incuming of the Provincial Insolvency Act (seet 16, sub-sect 2, clause a), by which provision, read with this section, the amount of the appropriation of the income of a public officer for the benefit of his creditors has been fixed (4)

Their wages may depend on the amount they do (6) For what is included in domestic servant, see cases noted (7) In England the attachment by any Court of Record or inforior Court of the wages of any servant, labourer, or workman was abolished in 1870 (8)

A distinction has been recognized between a right to receive money for purpo es of muntenance properly so called and a right or interest in a toperty which forms a fund or estate out of which an annuity is baid to the range -the former is a personal right and malienable, the latter can be thenated. Where an appellant conveyed his estate to his son, but retuned a right to receive from him a certain sum annually it was held that this was not a right to future in untenance, but a valuable interest in the property (6)

"Agricultural produce."-The original proposal was to authorize the Court only to declare a fixed proportion of any growing crop to be exempted, hut it was universally considered impracticable. It has been considered to be clear that the amount to be exempted, not merely of growing crops but of all "agricultural product,' must depend upon the circumstances of each particular case As a matter of working practice, the original proposal to treat a proportion of growing crops as free from hability to attachment and sale could not be convemently carried into effect. It was therefore proposed that the growing crop, as such, should be attached, but that the proportion to be exempted should, when ascertained, he "released from attachment," and should be face from hability to sale Subsequently, however, the words "he exempted from hability to attachment or sale in execution of a decree" wore substituted for the words "bo released from attachment and shall be free from liability to sale in execution of a decree," in order, it was said, to make it clear that the exemption extends to produce which has been hypothe-The provisions of O XXI r. 44 authorizing the judgment debtor to attend to his crop while under attachment, were thought sufficient to provent any hardship arising from this procedure. The proviso, originally appended to the draft of this section by way of greater caution, saving any first charge which by any law is vested in the Government for the recovery of revenue, or in a landholder for the recovery of rent, has been omitted, because it was considered that the special and local enactments, by which the first charges in favour of ient of revenue are cleated are sufficiently safeguarded by sect 3, ante

process shall give notice to such uoman that she is at liberty to withdraw; and, after allowing reasonable time for her to withdraw and giving her reasonable facility for withdrawing, he may enter such room for the purpose of seizing the property, using at the same time every precaution, consistent with these provisions, to prevent its clandestine removal.

Seizure of property—This section, save for the first sentence, come sponds with sect 271 of Act X of 1877, with the exception that in that Act the words "house or other building" were used instead of "duelling house" the first sentence was added by Act XIV of 1882 According to that Act, sub clause (2) commenced with the words "or shall break open any outer door of a duelling house" instead of the words in itabes while sub clause (3) commenced "Procuded that if the room be" instead of "Where a room in a duelling-house," while the word "break" in sub clause (2) has been substituted for "unfacen and". The second sub clause has been amended to bring it into how with sect 55, ande

"Any outer door "—It was formerly held that he might break open the door of a shop, (1) or remove locks on the door of a goldh and put on other locks for safe ustedy (2) Under the earher Codes, which prohibited the breaking open of any outer door of a dwelling house it was held the privilege extended to anout house or other office annexed to the dwelling house but not to a building such as a storehouse or barn standing at a distance and not forming parcel of it (3) By the amendment introduced by the present Code the judgment debtors refusal to grant access to his dwelling house justifies the person executing to break open any outer door, that is, any outer door of the dwelling house of the defendant but not of the house of a stranger

"Break open"—A person executing a process for attachment of move ables having gained access to the house was held to have a right to remove the lock from the door of a room in which he had reasonable ground for supposing moveable property was lodged (4). A bainfi who breaks the doors of a third person in execution of a decree against the judgment debtor is a trespasser if it turns out that the person or goods of the debtor are not in the house [5].

under the decree gets a good title against all persons whom the suit binds (1). The quantity and nature of right and interest existing in the debtor at the time of attachment and advertisement for sale, alone pass by the sale (2). But in inortgage suits the right, title, and interest, both of mortgage and the mortgage, is passed: the right of the mortgagor as it stood when he made the mortgage, and not merely as it stood at the time of the Court sale (3). An auction-purchaser is bound to satisfy himself of the value, quantity, and title of the thing sold, just as much as if he were purchasing the same under private contract (4). Where the sale is not vitated by fraud, the only extent to which the purchaser can claim ichef is that indicated by sect 315 (now r. 93, post) (5). In the case of Registrar's sales in the High Court, compensation is also allowable for circus and misstatements as to particulars of description of the property (6).

Ordinarily the purchaser buys merely the right, title, and interest of the judgment debtor with all its defects (7) This was expressly stated in the certificate under the Code of 1859 and is, in fact, ordinarily the case now, though what could have been and what was sold is a mixed question of law and fact to be determined on the whole of the proceedings and the facts of the particular case (8) As stated ordinarily, the personal right, title, and interest of the debter passes. In certain cases the estate passes as in the case of a Hindu widow where the proceeding, though nominally against the heiress, is really against lier as representing the estate, (9) or in those cases under the rent law where a sale passes not morely the right, title, and interest of the tenant but the tenure itself (10) Leaving out of consideration this latter ease, which is subject to certain statutory rules, the purchaser simply gets what the debtor, whether

The present Code in the first sub-clause has substituted "any person claiming title under a purchase certified by the Court." property mortgaged to his father, the representatives of the mother were debarred under this section from recovering a portion of the property (1)

"Purchase was made on behalf of the plaintiff"-The former worde were "on behalf of any other person" This does not include an agreement by the purchaser to sell after his purchase, (2) but it does include a case where the defendant as the alleged agent of the decreeholders, who had been refused permission to purchase, purchased the property, and the decree holders, hearing of the purchase, supplied the purchase money, ratified the purchase, and agreed to take a conveyance after confirmation of the sale (3) It does not apply to a case of a purchase made by a member of a joint Hindu family with joint funds , (4) nor in a suit for partition by a Hindu son, to a purchase by an outsider benamce for his, the plaintiff's, father with family funds (5) Nor does it apply to a case where the person setting up the benamee character of the purchaser does not claim under the certified purchaser or the alleged real purchaser. So the purchaser in execution of a mortgage decree may prove that the certified nurchaser of the interest of one of the mort gagors in a salo in execution made subject to the mortgage was benamee for the mortgagor, (6) and a decree holder may sue the certified purchaser for sale of the properties purchased by him benamce for the judgment debtor and of which the judgment debter is in possession (7) But the Allahahad High Court held otherwise, holding that the question of who the plaintiff might be was not material, and that all suits against the certified purchaser were within the section (8) The eccond sub clause now provides an exception to this decision It certainly cover suits by the beneficial owner or the successors in title of the beneficial owner (9) This section contemplates a suit by a person claiming to be the beneficial owner against the certified purchaser and not a suit where a third party asserts the certified purebaser is not the beneficial owner, in a suit by the certified purchaser, (10) nor a suit by a creditor of the real owner (11)

may, with the consent of the mortgagee or incumbrancer, order that the property be sold free from the mortgage or charge, giving to the mortgagee or incumbrancer the same interest in the proceeds of the sale as he had in the property sold;

(3) Nothing in this section affects any right of the Government.

Object and scope of section —Under the Code of 1859 the attach ing creditor was entitled to be first paid out of the proceeds of the property attached and sold, the surplus only being hable to distribution rateably among subsequent attaching creditors—whereas under the Code of 1877 and subsequent and present Code it is immaterial at whose instance an attachment is placed—Every creditor who has applied is entitled to a rateable distribution (1). The present provisions prevent multiplicity of procedure and that scramble by several judgment debtors which used to take place under the Code of 1859 (2). The section draws a sharp distinction between attachment and realization (3) and an attaching creditor is entitled to no priority over other creditors until a sale at his instance has actually taken place.

The object of the section is two fold I ristly to prevent unnecessary multiplicity of execution proceedings, to obviate in a case where there are many decree holders, such competent to execute his decree by attachment and sale of a particular property the necessity of each and every one separately attaching and separately selling that property. The other object is to secure an equitable administration of the property hyplacing all the decree bolders upon the same footing, and making the property rateably divisible among them, instead of allowing one to exclude all the others merely because he happened to be the first who had attached and sold the property (1)

Where it was contended on behalf of the defendants that, having regard to the terms of the action an attachment made by the plaintiffs enured for the benefit of all persons holding decrees for money against the same judgmentdehtor, and who complied with the conditions specified in the section, that is to say that, provided the defendants have, prior to the realization, applied to the Court holding the assets for execution of decrees for money against the same judgment-debtor and have not obtained satisfaction thereof, they are, without any attachment of their own, entitled to share rateably with the plain tills in the proceeds of the sale, although in the absence of the plaintiff's attachment they could not themselves, after the judgment-debtor's death, have enforced execution against this property, it was held that argument was to some extent favoured by the language of the section, but that it was clear that this section cannot he read absolutely literally. If it were to ha read literally, without any regard to its real object and policy, the result would be an abourdity, because the only condition expressly required is the existence of an application for execution made by the persons specified prior to the realization area spective altogether of the result of such applications or any objections to them however well founded. But it has been held, and it could not otherwise have been held, that an application for execution which was hurred by limitation (2) or an application which had for any reason been rejected, would not entitle the applicant to share rateably under this section, and therefore it is clear that one must give the section a common sensa construction, and see what sort of casa it really provides for The object of the section being as above stated, it was not desired to enlarge in any way the rights of decree holders or place at their disposal the proceeds of property which they could not have themselves attached It entitled to share in the proceeds only those decree holders who could have themselves attached and sold the property. It was not meant to enable a decree holder to indirectly get the benefits of an execution which he could not humself have enforced directly Where the decree holders are persons who could have themselves attached and sold the property then hut only then an attach ment and sale hy one is correctly described as enuring for the benefit of all (3)

The provisions of this section show that when property is sold in execution of a decree it is sold not only for the realization of the money due under that particular decree, but of all other decrees the holders of which have applied for execution. When property is sold in execution of a decree it cannot be sold again at the instance of another decree holder, who may have attached it hefore the attachment effected by the decree holder, under whose decree it is actually sold and when a judicial sale takes place all previous attachments effected upon the property sold fall to the ground (4).

Where in execution of two decrees certain properties were sold the proceeds of which were sufficient to pay the decree holders, it was held that on the interposition of a creditor who had not attached, the Court was right in selling a third property, as such creditor would be entitled to share, with the result that it could not be said that by the amount realized from the first sale the decrees under execution were satisfied (1)

The section relates to procedure only, and was intended to afford an additional facility to decree holders. It does not interfere with substantive rights or the maintenance of a suit, notwith etanding that a party may not have availed himself of its facilities (2) On the other band, failure to participate does not prevent a creditor executing his decree in any other manner (3)

Permission granted to a judgment creditor to set off the amount of the purchase money payable for the property sold against the debt due to him under his decree must be taken to be granted subject to the provisions of this section (4)

The formor section was bold not to apply to a deposit made by a judgment-

debtor under sect 310A (now O XXI r 89) of the former Code (5)

An order under this section affects only interests existing at the time
The insolvency of the debtor introduces a new state of things from the date of the insolvency, but as regards sums accrued due prior to the date of the insolvency, the order under this section creates righte which are not affected by the insolvency (6)

It has been held that sect 490 (now O XXXVIII 1 12) did not empower a decree holder to share in the distribution of property he has attached, and that though there was no necessity to re attach, an application for execution was importative (7)

Under the last Code it was in some cases held that when a person desired to share in the assets realized by a salo in execution he must apply to the Court in which those assets were for the execution of his decree and if it were found that property attached by an inferior Court was already or thereafter hecamo subject to an attachment issued from a superior Court the decree holder must have applied to transfer his application to the higher Court if he desired to secure the application of the attached property and its proceeds to the satisfaction of his decree (8) A contrary view was adopted in the Calcutta High Court, where it was held that the section did not require the transfer of the decree to the Court where the process of realization took place as a condition to an attachment, (3) but if a debt was attached no equitable assignment of it was valid against another creditor who subsequently obtained an order under this section (1). An application does not therefore operate as a substantive attachment, and will lapse, as formerly was the case, when the original attachment terminates.

It is not loss provided either that an application for distribution cannot decree-bolder, or that notice of such an application having been made must of uccessity be given to the other decree holders (5). After an order for distribution has been made, and before the funds have been actually distributed, it is open to one of the decree holders to maintain a suit for a declaration that the decree of a next decree-holder is collimate, and that he is not entitled to share in the sale proceeds (6)

Assets held—That is available for distribution in execution of a decree. The words of the last Code were assets "realized by sale or otheruse in execution of a decree". Assets meant the proceeds of the sale of the property sold in execution (7). Moneys paid into Court by sale or otherwise were assets from the moment of their payment into Court (8). "Realized" meant that property had been converted into or obtained in cash, or some other form available for immediate distribution. There is nothing in the word itself which required that the process should take place as the result of any ulternor proceeding in the course of execution (9). Assets were realized when the whole of the proceeds were paid into Court (10). But the word "realized was however followed by words which showed that the realization must have taken place in a particular way, viz in execution (1) from the property of the judgment debtor, (2) the proceeds being "assets" even before the sale becomes absolute (3) Where therefore assets were realized but not in process of execution the section did not apply, as where moneys were paid by a judgment-debtor under arrest (4) or paid into Court (5) voluntarily, though no doubt under pressure of the decrees, or were realized by private sale of properties attached, the assets being realized under the section, not by the attachment but by the sale (6)

Although this section is wider than sect 295 of the last Code, yet the effect of sects 275 and 310x of the last Code (now represented by O XXI r 55 and O XXI r 89) remains unaltered, and therefore sums paid into Court for a particular purpose under O XXI r 55 are not assets under this section, (7) neither are sums paid into Court under O XXI r 89 (8)

The object of the provision should be to expedite and cheapen the execution of decrees against the same person by adjusting the claims of rival decrebolders without the necessity for separate proceedings. If, however, the property is not sufficient to satisfy all the claimants, the wording of the last Code as judicially interpreted, held out an inducement to the attaching creditors to settle out of Court with the judgment debtor at the expense of the other decree holders (9). The language of the section has been altered and widened by referring to assets held available for distribution rather than to assets "realized in execution." It is necessary of course that assets in order to be "held" must be realized. It is not however necessary now that the realization must have been in execution as that phrase was interpreted under the former. Code. It is sufficient that having here realized (and probably that will he held to be when the entire amount due from a purchaser bas been paid into Court) they are available for distribution in execution. SUITS IN PARTICULAR CASES.

SUITS BY OR AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT OR PUBLIC OFFICERS

- 79 (1) Suits by or against the Government shall be insti-[s Suits by or against tuted by or against the Secretary of State for India in Council
- (2) Nothing in this section shall be deemed to limit or otherwave affect any information exhibited by the Advocate General in exercise of the power declared by section 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813.

Suits—This is sect 416 of the last Code Sects 417-421 are now in 2-6 of O XXVII, the first rule of that Order, dealing with pleadings, being new Sect 422 is now r 27 of O V Sect 423 is r 7 of O XXVII Sects 424 and 425 are now sects 60, 81 Sects 426 and 427 are r 8 of O XXVII Sects 428 and 429 are now sects 51 and 52

The inhility of the Secretary of State for India in Council to be sued depends on the statute 21 & 22 Vict o 106, for the better government of India, and turns principally upon the construction of sect 65 of that Statute (1) Whether a suit will be at the instance of Government is a matter of substantive law As regards the Court in which such a suit assuming it to be should be brought, reference should be made in the case of the High Courts to their Letters Patent, in other cases to the various Indian Civil Courts Acts, and to sects 16-20 of this Code (2) Whether and when a suit will be against a public officer is a question of substantive law Judicial officers are protected by Act XVIII of 1850, but no such general protection is granted to executive officers (1) None of these matters are relevant to these provisions, which deal with the subject of procedure in a case properly instituted. The statute first eited provides that the Secretary of State for India in Council may be sued as a body corporate, and this section provides that suits shall be so entitled (2) Where, however, a suit was wrongly brought against a Magistrate, the High Court, on appeal, allowed the name of the Magistrate to be struck out, and that of the Secretary of State for India in Council to be inserted (3)

Informations —The power of the Advocate General to exhibit informations in the nature of actions at law or Bills in Equity was expressly declared by sect 111 of the East India Company Act, 1813 (53 Geo 3, c 15b), and kept alive by sect 2 of the Government of India Act, 1833 (3 & 4 Will 4, c 85), and again by sect 1 of the Government of India Act, 1853 (16 & 17 Vict c 95), now merged in the statute of 1858 already mentioned (21 & 22 Vict c 106) The Governor General in Council spreeluded by sect 22 of the Indian Councils Act 1861 (24 & 25 Vict c 67), from legislative interference with the provisions of any of the enactments above quoted —The question was considered whether sect 416 of the last Code appeared to exclude informations exhibited by the Advocate General, and whether it was therefore desirable to add a proviso saving such information —And this has been done

80 No suit shall be instituted against the Secretary of State for India in Council, or against a public officer in respect of any act purporting to be done by such public officer in lise official capacity, until the expiration of two months next after notice in writing has been, in the case of the Secretary of State in Council, delivered to, or left at the office of, a Secretary to the Local Government or the Collector of the district, and, in the case of a public officer, delivered to him or left at his office, stating the cause of action, the name, description and place of residence of the plaintiff and the rehef which he claims, and the plaint shall contain a statement that such notice has been so delivered or left

And it has been held under the present Code that this section applies to suits of every kind (1) The object of notice is to give the defendant breathing time, so as to enable him to determine whether reparation ought to be made . and the principle is applicable to any class of suit (2) The substitution of the words "any act" for "an act" points in the same direction Notice has, in consequence, been deemed necessary even when the remedy sought was an injunction, and though delay involved in the giving of notice might involve the commission of the wrong complained of before the suit was filed (3) But the objection for want of notice can only he taken by the Scoretary of State, and where no rehef is claimed against him it has been held that no notice is necessary (4)

"Shall be instituted."-That is, commenced The section says that uo suit shall be instituted, not that it shall not be proceeded with or main tained The lauguage of the section is imperative and absolutely dehars a Court from entertaining a suit instituted without compliance with the provisions of the section A Court cannot under such circumstances stay proceedings end allow time to the plaintiff to serve the requisite notice, but its only course is to reject the plaint (5) It has, however, heen held that there is nothing in the law to show that in case of any emendment of the plaint, necessitated by the alleged discovery of feets previously unknown to the plaintiff, the Secretary of State should have a further notice of two months, when the relief asked for is not altered by such emendment, and it only embodies certain further material in support of the plaintiff's contention (6) And where in an action already instituted against the Secretary of State, a public servant was also efterwards joined as defendent, who, however, was not sued for eny act done hy him independently of Government, and no separate rehef was asked for against him no notice was held to be required in his case (7) Further there is nothing to prevent the defendant from waiving the notice or from being estopped by his conduct from pleading the want of it at the trial (8). Though the Secretary of State is not a necessary party to a suit to set aside a revenue sale, yet the Government has such an interest in the suit as would justify the Court in adding the Secretary of State as a party,(1) and this section, it has been held, does not prevent that being done (2)

Public officer -Sec as to the definition of this term, sect 2, ante Official Trustee , (3) Official Assignee , (4) Administrator General , (5) a Collector acting as agent of the Court of Wards, and as such illegally seizing property. (6) and a Talukdarı Settlement Officer, when acting as manager under Act XXI of 1881,(7) or under sect 79A of Bomhay Land Revenue Code (Bom Act V of 1879),(8) have been held to be public officers

"In respect of any act "-The words "in respect of an act purporting to be done by him in his official capacity" were introduced by Act XII of 1879 into sect 424 of the last Code under which it was held that the qualifications "in respect of an act, etc.," do not relate to the Secretary of State They did not apply to the case of the Secretary of State 10 Council (9) This is now made clear by the introduction of the words "by such public officer" The defendant must not only be a public officer, but the act must bedone in his official capacity (10) If not,(11) then the section does not apply There must, however, be a distinct act by the public officer which is complained of to entitle him to notice, and so it has been held unnecessary where a Collector was made a party not in respect of any alleged illegal act by him, but on the application of the minor's personal guardians in order to protect the minor's title, (12) and where a Collector was merely guardian ad hiem. In such a case the suit is not against him at all, and he defends on behalf of the minor only (13) To take a case out of this section it must be proved that there was something in the conduct of the Secretary of State which provented the plaintiff from complying with its provisions (1)

Notice — The three requisites to be stated are (a) cause of action, (b) name and residence, (c) rehef sought

The object of the section heins merely to inform the difendant substantially of the ground of complaint, the words "stating the cruse of action" should not be construed too strictly or narrowly (2) In considering the sufficiency of a notice on this point, it should not be read with the strictness with which a plaint should he read (3) A notice is sufficient if it substantially fulfils its object in informing the parties concerned generally of the nature of the suit intended to be filed (1)

The name of the intending plaintiff must be stated. A notice given by a party who dies before suit does not enjure, it has been held, for the benefit of his representative, and enable the latter to maintain the suit without giving a fresh notice, as the notice in such place does not give the name of the actual plaintiff (5). Further, the abode of the intending plaintiff must be stated (6) the amended section adds description of plaintiff. And this applies to all plaintiffs it there are more than one

Lastly, the relact claimed should he stated Generally, and as regards all these matters, it may be said (to adopt the language of Pollock, C B).(7) it is, on the question of sufficiency, necessary "to impart a little common sense into notices of this kind," and to ascertain whether the object of the Legislature has been substantially and effectively carried out. If no notice has heen given, or it is held to be insufficient, the proper course, it has been beld, is not to dismiss the suit, but to roject the plaint, and give an opportunity to serve a fresh notice (8)

"Plaint shall contain a statement"—The portion of this section relating to the plaint, containing a statement that such notice has been left or delivered in the manner presented by it, is separate from the earlier portion, which deals with the delivery of the notice two months before suit It is only when notice is not given that the suit is hable to be dismissed (or the plaint rejected). The suit, however may be proceeded with, if notice has been given in the manner prescribed, and subsequently the plaint is amended in order to state that fact (9)

tion of the suit should be obtained from the Advocate General, or the Collector or other efficer appointed by the Local Government (such as in Allahabad the Le al Remembrancer), (1) as the case may be An Assistant Collector discharging the duties of the Collector during his illness cannot grant sanction under this section (2) The object of such sanction is to guard charitable trusts from abuse, and for that purpose to prevent such proceedings from being instituted for no other reason than because it is known that the costs will be payable out of the charity funds (3) Where, however, a person has capacity to sue, the metrics that retuated him do not affect his capacity and will not by themselves defeat a suit for which sanction has been obtained (1) The Advocate General, Collector, or other officer is required to exercise his judgment before giving consent (5) Where the language of permission indicated that as regards the interest of the plaintiffs the Collector did not exercise his sudgment, it was beld to be n mere irregularity within sect 578 (now 99), post (6) But it has also been held, that the consent in writing must be a specific permission given to two or more persons by maine, and that a permission given to one applicant by name "and another" is not a sufficient compliance with the terms of the section (7) The suit brought under this section must correspond with the sanction as no reliefs can be awarded which are not contained in the section (8) It has been held by the Allahabad High Court that the obtaining of sanction is a pre requisite for the institution of the sut, and that the section cannot be read as meaning merely that the Courts cannot proceed with the suit already instituted until that consent bas been obtained, and that therefore if no valid consent is given before the institution of the suit, the mustake cannot be subsequently rectified unless by means of withdrawal, with permission to institute a fresh suit (9) Tho Advocate General may give consent to the institution of a suit, but not for the amendment of a defective suit (10) And the Court's action after the institu tion of the suit in unking a defendant a plaintiff has been held not subject to the consent of the idvocato General (11) Nor is consent necessary for the amendment of the plaint by mentioning particulars of the breach of trust (12)

4. The trust must be a public one.—The section presupposes the existence of a public trust and a suit for the administration, either partially of completely, of that trust (1) It enables the persons mentioned therein to sue trustees to enforce the better administration of the trust (2) Where, however, it is said that the section presupposes a trust, this does not mean that the defendant must admit the trust before the section can apply, but that the suit must proceed upon the allegation of the existence of a trust which may or may not be admitted by the defendant (3)

Private trusts concern only individuals or families for private convenience or support. By public trusts may be understood such as are constituted for the benefit either of the public at large, or of some considerable portion of it answering a particular description In private trusts the beneficial interest is vested absolutely in one or more individuals, who are, or within a certain time may be, definitely ascertained, and to whom therefore collectively, unless under somo legal disability, it is, or within the allowed time will be, competent to control, modify, or determine the trust A public or charitable trust, on the other hand, has for its objects the members of an uncertain and fluetuating body, and the trust itself is of a permanont character (4) A trust is none tho less a trust for a public purpose if its main object is the support of fakirs of a particular sect (5) The trust may be charitable, such as for the relief of the poor, or the advancement of learning, religion, or objects of general public utility, or religious, though all religious uses are charitable uses Though, therefore, the section, as originally enacted in the Code of 1877, did not contain the words "or roligious," there is little doubt but that the Legislature intended the section to embrace both charitable and religious purposes (6) It was however, held that the corresponding section in the Code of 1877 did not apply to religious endowments,(7) and therefore in the Code of 1882 the section was altered to expressly include religious trusts, in consequence of these rubugs and doubts which had been entertained. The contention that, while there exists the special enactment, XX of 1863, for the proper appropriation of endowments of lands relating to temples, the words "religious purposes" should be considered as referring only to cases where the endowments do not relate to temples, has been overruled (1)

The public trust may also be either express or constructive. The first are those which are raised and created by act of the parties, and are declared by them either in word or writing A constructive trust (to which this section also, though not the English Statute, applies) (2) is one arising, not by the act of the party, but hy operation of law, where a trustee gains some personal advantage by availing himself, and through the medium of his situation as trustee (3) It is imposed on such a person to prevent him from holding for his own benefit an advantage gained by reason of the fiduciary relation sub sisting between him and others, and for whose henefit only it is his duty to act (4) So, if a lease were the subject-matter of a public trust, a constructive trust would arise if a trustco renewed the lease in his own name. He would, in such case, be deemed to be a trustee for those interested in the original term And this would be equally so if the trustee was trustee of right or trustee de son tort And were there a breach of such constructive trust, hy making away with the renewed lease or net applying its benefits to the purposes of the trust there would be such a breach of trust as is referred to in this section (5) It has been recently held that where it is proved that certain property has been held for many generations for such purposes as the support of fakirs, and there is no evidence that the property was ever held for any other purpose, the Court ought to presume the existence of a charitable or religious trust within the maaming of these sections (6)

Where it was objected that the section was limited in its action to suits relating to property, and that its operation could not be extended to spiritual offices, it was held to be applicable where it is sought to remove the trusted from a religious office if, as the holder of such office, he is called upon to exercise husiness functions either as trustee or as manager of temple funds and properties, and thus necessarily possesses civil rights and consequent

liabilities (7)

5 There must he a breach of trust or necessity for directions —
Nextly, assuming that there is a trust and trustee it must be ascertained whether there is a breach of trust. If not, then the direction of the Court must be required for the administration of the trust. A breach of trust is not necessary. It is sufficient if there be a public trust, and the direction of the Court is considered necessary for its administration (1) If there be neither a breach of trust (2) nor necessity for such directions, (3) then the section does not apply As to evidence of breach of trust and the grounds which will justify removal for breach of trust, see cases below (4)

6 The suit must be for relief of the kind mentioned—Lastly though some or even alf of the other elements stated in the section are found to exist, a suit will not be within it unless the ielef sought therein is that which is expressly or impliedly mentioned in the section (5). No difficulty arises as regards the relief expressly mentioned in clauses (a) to (g). Contention has ever taken place as to what may be held to be included in the words "such further or other relief as the nature of the case may require".

The general clause ought to be read with the five preceding specified clauses, and the nature of the rehef which may be properly granted under it is of the same character as the rehefs which may be granted under the proceeding clauses. The five specified clauses are not merely illustrative, but furnish in indication of the nature of the rehef which may be granted in a suit under this section (6). This clause must be read with what has preceded as referring to further rehef to which the party may be entitled, which insess out of the casteuce of the trust in respect of which the suit has been brought (7). On this ground it has been held that a suit which has been instituted simply and solely for the purpose of having a declaration that certain proporty is trust-proporty, and which was in no way a suit for the administration of the trust, or the removal of the trustees, or for any of the purposes referred to was not within the section (8). It may, however, be that in a suit for such purposes a declaration may be meddenation may be meddenated and ancellary thereto (9). Within the words

"further or other rehel" is, it has been held, a decree for an account (1) This is now expressly mentioned in clause (d) Before a scheme can be settled for the management of a temple and its funds, an account of the trust property must be taken. Until the trust funds are ascertained it is impossible to settle a scheme (2) The Calentia High Court has in one case held that a sun for the removal of a tustee, and for the recovery of taust property from the lands of a third party to whom it has been impropelly alterated by the trustice, falls within the section (3) But this decision has been dissented from in the same Court, (4) in which it was held that persons claiming a title purely adverse to a trust are not proper parties to a suit for the execution of the trust. The Allahabad High Court has also held that the aliences are not proper parties, that a prayer for recovery of possession is not entertainable under this section, and that a suit for such purpose could be instituted only by the trustee (5)

The High Courts at Caloutta, (6) Bombay, (7) and Allahabad (8) have held that in a suit under this section the Court may remove a trustee hestilely for breach of trust, and that the section applies both to contentious and non contentious cases. Such relief was held to be involved in clause (b) of the former section, or to be included in "further or other relief." The Madras High Court, however held though at one time there was a difference of opinion on the point, that a suit to remove a trustee did not be under this section (9). A prayer for removal might however be inserted where the right of suit existed independently of, and the suit was not brought under this section (10). The unemded section

As clauses (b) and (c) allow of the appointment of new trustees and the vesting of the property in new trustees, it follows that the Court can take possession from the old trustee who has been removed and give it to the new trustee. Whether the Court can grant rehef by taking possession of trust-property from the hands of a third party, to whom it has been improperly ahenated, (1) has already been discussed. If there is a trustee and the suit is merely to recover property from strangers and not for the execution of the trust, it does not come within the section If, again, there is a trustee, but the suit be for his removal. then, till he is removed, the trust estate is vested in him, and he alone can sue strangers for possession. this section has the character of a summary proceeding. It possesses all the characteristics of a suit under sect 9 of the Code (1). Where a suit which is not within the section is instituted in a District Court, it has been held that the Court should not dismiss the suit, but should deal with it under sect 57, clause (a) (now O VII r 10), and r turn the plaint to be presented to the proper Court (2). So, also, where a Subordinate Judge held that this section was a bar to the suit, no consent having been obtained, it was held that he should not have proceeded to dispose of the case, but should have returned the plaint to be presented to the Court having jurisdiction to try the suit (3).

"Any other Court"—With reference to the words "any other Court empowered on that behalf," it has been held that the notification empowering the Court should not be directed to a particular judge and should not purport to deal with a particular hitgation which on the date of the notification was pending before another Court (1)

Execution —So far as a decree under this section orders particular acts to be performed by the defendants in the management of the trust, it may be enforced by their imprisonment or by the attachment of their property, or both (5). And in order to obtain the removal of trustees who have infringed the scheme, the latter may be amended so as to include a provision for removal, and it is not necessary to file a separate suit (6). In the undermentioned case (7) application was refused as the requirements of sects 235 (j) and 260 of the former Code bad becu ignored. Where an order was held act to invest a suit with a representative character, a person not on the record and not a member of the community of the plaintiffs hut claiming certain rights under the decree, was held to have no right to apply to compel the observance of the scheme directed by the decree (8). The directions in a scheme framed may be enforced in execution on application by persons interested (9).

Settling a scheme—Settling a scheme under this section is largely a matter of discretion, and the scheme will not be interfered with in appeal unless the discretion has been improperly exercised or the Court has failed to give due consideration to matters which it was bound to consider [10]

(3) No appeal shall be from a decree passed by the Court with the consent of parties.

Appeal.-An appeal is a stage in and part of the proceedings in a suit (1) There must be a suit, for if there is none there can be no decree, and therefore no appeal (2) It is the removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior Court for the purpose of testing the soundness of the decision of the former Court,(3) and the lodging of an appeal is thus equivalent to an allegation that the decree is wrong and that the reasons which led to it are as stated in the judgment insufficient (4) It is a hearing before another tribunal, being in this distinguished from a review which is the reconsideration of the same subject by the same Judge (5) The function of an Appellate Court is to determine what decree the Court below ought to have made. The former section allowed an appeal from any part of the decree which may also be of a provisional or preliminary character, such as a decree in a partnership or partition suit (3) Though an appeal was allowed against a portion of a decision, jet there should, it was held, be a decision relating to the disposal of the entire suit (1) The words "or from any part" have been now omutted

"Courts authorized to hear appeals "-See the various Civil Courts Acts, and in Act XII of 1887, sects 20, 21, sect 55, Indian Divorce Act (IV of 1869) (5) As to idmiralty juri-diction, see note (6)

The subject matter of an appeal should be valued (7) for the purpose of turisdiction, according to the law in force at the date of the appeal and not of the suit which led to it (8) Where a plaintiff definitely fixes a certain sum as the amount of his claim, this must be considered as the vilue of the original suit and the appeal will be accordingly, but where he fixes a certain sum as the amount of his claim only approximately or tentatively, and prays that the mount of his claim may be recertained in the course of the suit, then the amount found by the Court to be due to him must be regarded as the value of the original suit for the purpose of determining the forum of appeal (9)

Ex-parte decree (clause 2) - The clause allowing appeals from ex parte decrees was added by lect 45, Act VII of 1888, previous to which let it was doubted whether an appeal was given in such ca es (10)

1888 But such a remedy can be efficacious only in those cases, and their number must be small, in which the cz parte decree is either wrong in law on the face of the proceeding or is based upon evidence so weak that even though unrelutted it is insufficient to sustain the decree. In the great majority of cases in which a defendant having a good defence has had an ex parte decree passed against him, the disadvantage ho labours under is that ho has not been able to substantiate his defence by evidence before the Court Upon the record, as it stands, the ex parte decree may he unassailable, but if the defendant has an opportunity (which he was prevented from having owing to some sufficient cruse) of placing on the record evidence which he could have adduced to substantiate his defence, no such decree should have been passed. The remedy in such a case cannot be by way of appeal, which must ordinarily proceed upon the record as it stands The proper remedy must be the one provided by seet 108 of the Code" In Sadhu Krishna Ayyar a Kuppan (1) however, Sir Arnold White, C J, said that these observations were merely obiter, and he added "they seem to me to involve the reading into the Code of a great deal which the Legislature might have said but did not say. I think it must be taken that the Legislature by accident or design has given a right of appeal apart from the merits, against an order on the ground that the defendant was not in default in failing to appear and against an ex parte decree, also apart from the ments upon the same grounds. There is a power to remand a case when the Appellate Court reverses an order refusing to set iside an ex parte decree, and it seems to me anomalous to hold that there is no such power when the Appellate Court allows an appeal against a decree upon the ground that there ought not to have been an ex parte decree against the defendant" (2) In this case it was held by the bull Bench that when a suit is decided ex parte an Appellate Court, to which the appeal from the decree 19 preferred under sect 510 of the former Code, had jurisdiction to reverse the decree of the lower Court on the ground that such Court was wrong in proceeding to decide the suit ex pane and remand the suit for re-hearing (3)

Consent decree (clause 3)—No appeal hes from such a decree A consent decree cannot be set aside by appeal or by motion (4). It or setting aside such a decree there are two available modes of procedure (a) by a sunt (b) by an application for a review of the judgment sought to be set aside. But the note proper mode is by an application for review (5)

under the general law, he may forego them and debar himself, or he estopped from asserting them If, therefore, an appellant agrees not to appeal, he cannot do so (1) A party, it has been held, may also otherwise be barred from appealing Thus, where a decree was obtained against A and others, and A not appealing, the decree was set aside and the case remanded on the appeal of the co defendants but re assumed by the first Court at was held that A could not appeal from the last decree (2) In the under mentioned case (3) however, a suit having been decided by the first Court after an intervener had been made party, it was remainded for trial on the appeal of the intervenor whose name was ordered to be expanged from the record The suit was decided again in f nour of the plaintiff, but the decision was reversed on appeal. It was held that the fact of the defendant having in the first instance allowed the intervenor ilone to appeal, did not dehar him, after the case was reepened by remand, from appealing in his own person

Chapter XLI of the last Code treated of appeals from original decrees, and Chapter XLII in the same Code of appeals from appellate decrees provided that an appeal shall be from such decrees gene, ally It is not expressly said by whom an appeal may be preferred, but it may reasonably be assumed that any party to the suit in which a decree is presed may, if dis-itisfied with it appeal from it O XLI r 33 refers to the judgment in appeal from original decrees, and enacts that it may be for confirming, varying or investing the decree against which the appeal is made, and applies under sect 108 to judgments in appeal from appellate decrees Hence, also, it is inferrible that the parties who are allowed to appeal are those who desire that a decree should be varied or reversed (4)

But a pro forma defendant tourist whom no judgment has been given has no right to appeal, even if another party has been found to be the owner of the land, masmuch as such finding carries with it no legal consequence as against him (5) So in the under mentioned case (6) it was held that the tenant had no reason to object to a decree, which was altogether in his favour, and it was not competent to him to present in appeal from the finding on an issue. if the findings be on issues which are not necessary for the decision of the suit in which they are raised (1)

Assuming there is otherwise no har, the question as to who may appeal is determinable by the common sense consideration that there can be no appeal when there is nothing to appeal about A person, therefore, who is no party (2) to the suit in which a decision is given can, as the decree does not affect him. have no ground to appeal therefrom Tho person appealing must also have been a party when the decree was passed Thus a person was once made a party to a suit, but the decree was set aride, the suit as against him dismissed. and the ease remanded for trial From this last decision he appealed, but the Court ordered the appeal to be struck off as made by a person no longer a party to the suit (3) A party, however, to the suit when the decree is passed, or when they have been brought on the record, his representative (4) or assigned (5), may appeal regarding their own rights invaded by the decree (6)

Ordinarily only the party against whom a decree is passed, that is the person ordinarily injuriously affected by the decree, can appeal For the same reason a person against whom a suit has been dismissed usually cannot appeal against the decree, as he is not affected otherwise than beneficially by it But in some cases a suit may be dismissed as against a defendant and yet the latter may have a right of appeal It is not because a suit is formally dismissed that no appeal lies but because such dismissal is ordinarily not merely no grievance hut an actual benefit to the defendant There is nothing to complain of If however, a party is aggreeved (7) by a decree then notwithstanding that the suit is dismissed against him he may appeal

Vohan, 2 4, 497, 499, 501, per Stuart, C.J. I am now quite ready to accept the principle that an appellant must be aggressed by the

The general question whether successful defendants in a suit can appeal from the decree in their favour has been raised in several cases, though under different circumstances In the first of the last-mentioned cases, which was one in which the defendants had no contention inter se, but on the contrary a common interest against the plaintiff who was the respondent in the appeal, it was held that as the appellants had no ground of complaint, and as the appeal was against a decree wholly in their own favour, the legal meaning of which was that the plaintiff's suit altogether failed, there was no appeal (1) In the under mentioned case (2) the plaintiff's suit had been dismissed. The defen dant appellants did not desiro that the decree dismissing the suit should be varied or reversed. The attempted appeal, which was disallowed, was by one defendant against another, the matter in issue being the authenticity and validity of a deed of conditional sale purporting to have been executed by one defendant as vendor in favour of the other as vendee So again a party cannot appeal to protect a possession which he has disclaimed to hold except on hehalf of another party whom he is not authorized to represent and who has not appealed (3) In such case he is not interested either on his or on such other party's hehalf (4) Inasmuch as an appeal hes from the decree and not from the judgment, (5) therefore a party cannot appeal from a decree which is altogether in his favour simply because there may he findings or expressions in the judgment which may he prejudicial to him (6) In a suit for rent in which the only real issue was whether one X was or was not hable for rent, and in which Y the alleged purchaser of the tenuro was held to have been wrongly made a party on the application of the tenant, it was held that Y had no light to appeal against a decree given against X praying for a declaration of her (Y's) hability for rent as purchaser from the tenant (7) On the other hand, an appeal has been held to be hy defendants against whom specifically no decree was made, but whose defence to the suit was necessarily disposed of by the decree (1) In order to see what the decree really means, the Court may look not only into the judgment but into the pleadings. If the decree, although apparently, and so far as it goes, favourable to the defendants, is yet imporfect and not self explanatory, and when read by the light of the record really unfavourable ond may prove injurious to them, then the defendants, being aggreed by it and having overy interest to appeal, may do so (2). In short, any person who being party to proceedings is injuriously affected by a decree passed therein is entitled to appeal (3). And if this be shown, it is immaterial that the suit may have been dismissed as against him.

Orduardy a case is decided upon issues between the plaintiffs on the one side and the defeudants on the other. Thus a defendant, whether interested or pro forms only, cannot appeal against a co-defendant (4) unless the Court has deaft with the case at the hearing as reising not only a question between the plaintiff and defendants but also is between the defendants, in which case one of the defendants can appeal against the decree as between hunself and the other defendant (5). When the decree of the Lower Court proceeds on a ground common to oll defendants the Appellate Court may, on oppeal by one of the defendants organist the whole decree, reverse the decree in so far os it affects the other defendants though they have not joined in the appeal (6).

It was, however, a matter of debate under the former Code whether in an appeal against the final decree, it was open to the appellant to question the correctness of the preliminary decree when no appeal had been preferred against it within the time allowed (1). The object of this section is to prevent preliminary questions licing raised in the form of an appeal after the case has been decided on its merits (2). Procedure on difference of opinion.—The result of this provision is as follows -Where the Judges differ, but not on any question of law, there can be no reference and the decree is affirmed (1) But there is an appeal under the Letters Potent (tide post) If the difference is on a point of law, then the Judges may or may not (2) refer the point of law. In the case of reference the judgment on the point referred is according to the mojority of the Judges who first heard the appeal and the third Judge, and in the second case (that is, where there is no reference under this section) there is an appeal under the Letters Patent The effect of this section is to supersede the provision in the Letters Patent that in the case of disagreement the judgment of the senior Judge shall prevail, (3) a provision which is still in force as regards Letters Patent appeals,(4) but it does not take away the right of appeal Therefore when the judgment of a Lower Court has been confirmed under this section by reason of one of the Judges of the Appellate Court agreeing upon the facts with the Court below, an appeal will be against such judgment under the Letters Patent, notwithstanding the terms of this section (5) When the Judges of a Division Bench have concurred in a final decree, the fact that they differed on one point is no ground for an appeal under the Letters Patent (6) It was also held that where the Judge to whom an appeal was referred, concurred with one of the differing Judges as to the decree to be passed, but did not agree with bim as to the reasons therefor, there was no further oppeal to the High Court under clause (15) of the Letters Patent (7) See now as to amendment next paragraph but one Sect 617 of the Code of 1877 was held to extend sect 575 of that Code (which on the face opinion on a point of law, they may state the point of law upon which they differ, and the appeal shall then be heard upon that point only by one or more of the other Judges, and such point shall be decided according to the opinion of the majority (if any) of the Judges who have heard the appeal, including those who first heard it.

Procedure on difference of opinion -The result of this provision is as follows -Where the Judges differ, but not on any question of law, there can be no reference and the decree is affirmed (1) But there is an appeal under the Letters Patent (vide post) If the difference is on a point of law, then the Judges may or may not (2) refer the point of law. In the ease of reference the judgment on the point referred is according to the majority of the Judges who first heard the appeal and the third Judge, and in the second case (that is, where there is no reference under this section) there is an appeal under the Letters Patent. The effect of this section is to supersede the provision in the Letters Patent that in the case of disagreement the judgment of the senior Judge shall prevail.(3) a provision which is still in force as regards Letters Patent appeals.(4) but it does not take away the right of appeal Therefore when the judgment of a Lower Court has been confirmed under this section by reason of one of the Judges of the Appellato Court agreeing upon the facts with the Court below, an appeal will be against such judgment under the Letters Patent, notwithstanding the terms of this section (5) When the Judges of a Division Bench have concurred in a final decree, the fact that they differed on one point is no ground for an appeal under the Letters Patent (6) It was also held that where the Judge to whom an appeal was referred, concurred with one of the differing Judges as to the decree to be passed, but did not agree with him as to the reasons therefor, there was no further appeal to the High Court under clause (15) of the Letters Patent (7) See now as to amendment next paragraph but one Sect 647 of the Code of 1877 was held to extend sect 575 of that Code (which on the face

Calcutta High Court (1) A special appeal on the grounds given in sect. 160 hes to the Ifigh Court from the decision of the Civil Judge at Vinchur (2) When the lower Appellate Court passes separate decrees in appeals relating to tho same matter between the same parties, against the same person, separate second appeals must be filed, though the decision in one second appeal will govern the rest (3)

Scope of second appeal.-The grounds upon which a second appeal hes and the cases in which it is open to the High Court to interfere with the judgment of the lower Appellate Court, are those set out in sect 100, and sect. 101 expressly enacts that no second appeal shall be except on the grounds mentioned in the former section The Privy Council have, in more than one case, pointed out the necessity of adhering strictly to the provisions of those sections (1) And no Court in India or elsewhere has power to add to or enlarge those grounds (5) No second appeal has against a finding of fact. If the High Court poes through a case as a regular appeal it exceeds the statutory limits of its jurisdiction. It has no power to entertain a case except as an appeal from an appellate decree on the grounds stated in sect 100, which deprives them of the right to review findings of fact unless these are vitiated with one or other of the errors or defects stated in this section (6) The limitation to the power of Courts in a second appeal ought to be attended to and strictly followed, and the appellant ought not to be allowed to question the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a matter of fact (7) It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent fundings of fact, that different Courts, in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view bo taken of it, must necessarily lead to one and the same inference (8) The consent of parties will not give the High Court a jurisdiction which it does not otherwise possess, (9) so the High Court, even with the consent of the parties, cannot pronounce a decree on the facts in a special appeal (10) On second appeal the High Court have no power to deal with the sufficiency of evidence, they have only a right to entertain questions of law. Their duty being thus confined, it seems that when evidence has been wrongly admitted by the Court helow the High Courts have, generally speaking, no right to decide whether the remaining evidence in the case other than that which has been improperly admitted is sufficient to warrant the finding of the Court helow. This question of sufficience of evidence cannot be decided without examining in detail that other evidence and determining as a question of fact, whether it is sufficient of itself to warrant the lower Court's finding (1).

In a special appeal, the general affirmation of a judgment below can only be on the points raised by the special appellant. By rejecting a special appeal it does not follow that the High Court necessarily affirms all the other findings of fact or of law which the lower Appellate Court may incidentally

come to (2)

If the judgment and decree of the lower Appellate Court centain findings which, though immaterial to the decision of the ease and unnecessary for the Judge to decide, jet, as they form part of the judgment and decree might give rise to the application of the doctrine of res judicata, the High Court on second appeal, may order that such findings shall be expunged from the record (3). There is no general rule that in every case when evidence is taken on a question of fact the parties are entitled to the decision of two Courts. Therefore when additional evidence is taken by the lower Appellate Court, the High Court cannot go into the facts as in the case of a first appeal (4).

The Code provides for the manner in which the judgments of Courts are to be invised and corrected and there is no other lawful mode by which decrees of Courts can be reviewed. Thus where a Court of Appeal directed a remand for a particular purpose, namely, to try the plea of payment, the Court of remand, it wis held, should try that plea only and had no authority to try any other plea, if the Court proceeded to hear and determine the whole case over a anu, the decree passed by it should be revised except as to the plea referred to on remand (5). A remand order conclusively determines the points of law involved in it, and these cannot be questioned on second appeal (6). The High Court in special appeal (6). The High Court in special appeal (6). The High Court in special appeal (6). The High Court in special appeal (6). The High Court in special appeal (6). The High Court in special appeal (6). any principle of law to the appeal before them, then they may dispose of the case without any remand, (1) hut it was formerly beld that if the lower Appellate Court omitted to record any finding upon a material part of the case, the second Appellate Court were not at liberty to draw any inference of fact from the evidence in the case, and should remand the case for retrial (2) But see the new sect 103, post (3)

The above observations as to the limitation on the power to deal with facts must now be read subject to the new provisions contained in sect

In adjudicating on issues of fact the first process is to determine as to their existence or non existence. In order to determine such an issue, inferences are necessarily drawn from other facts as to the existence or non existence of facts in issue. Such inferences and the conclusions to which they lead are inferences and findings of fact.

An erroneous finding of fact is not an error or defect in procedure, though, as herematter pointed out, the Court may in adjudicating on fact vitate its conclusions by errors of law and procedure. A simple finding of fact, however erroneous or unsatisfactory it may be, is not the subject of second appeal. There is no jurisdiction to entertain such an appeal on the ground of an erroneous finding of fact however gross or inexcusable the error may seem to be. Where there is no error or defect in the procedure, the finding of the first Appellate Court upon a question of fact is final, if that Court had before it evidence proper for its consideration in support of the finding (4)

There are however, decisions which held that if the judgment is not based upon the whole evidence upon the records, and the Judge does not take into consideration all the facts and circumstances of the case then, there is an error in procedure, (5) as also where the Judgo had erroneously assumed a fact to exist which does not exist—as where a Judge came to a conclusion on the assumption that a document had not been filed whereas it was on the record,(1) or helicves there is no evidence of a fact when there is,(2) or proceeds upon a misconception of the facts proved, (3) or bases his judgment on evidence which is not on the record (4)

Tho last four cases of misconception offer no difficulty. This cannot, however, be said as to the first case. There is no doubt as to the principle, that in judging on the facts the Court must consider all of them, otherwise there is not a proper procedure in investigation. The difficulty, however, is in establishing its violation by showing in any particular case that a fact has not been considered even where it may not have been expressly mentioned in the Judgment. If the fact was present to the Judge's mind, but he has either not given it weight, or the degree of weight which it is alleged he should have done, it is sometimes loosely said that the fact has not heen considered. But this case is to be distinguished from those above inentioned, and is really tantamount to an appeal as to fact. The line distinguishing the two classes of cases is not infrequently a narrow one, and has perhaps in some cases been overpassed.

In, however, the actual determination of fact there may be error of law The High Court may consider whether the procedure adopted by the lower Appellate Court in dealing with the facts is proper or not (5) Thus its conclusion may be come to in the absence of all evidence, (6) or he hased on

Further, if it he assumed that no error of law has been committed in the mode of dealing with the facts, that is in determining their existence or non existence, from the facts so found inferences may be drawn as to the existence of certain matters which are the subject of legal definition. In such a case there is a legal inference from the facts found. Though the finding of fact cannot be questioned, an appeal Court may accept the finding of fact and ques tion the accuracy of the legal inferences therefrom, for this is a matter of law and not of fact. The soundness of conclusions involving matter of law may be questioned (5) In such a case it is not any fact which is in question, but the soundness of the conclusions of law drawn from those facts. Thus upon the question whether there is a hinding agreement a Court may find certain facts and go on to hold upon those facts that they constitute in law an acceptance of the agreement. The finding as to the facts which are the basis of the inference cannot be questioned though the inference, being a legal inference on the facts found, may be (6) If the legal conclusion derived from the facts found is not consistent with settled principles of law, there is an error of law (7) So acquiescence is not a question of fact but of legal inference from the facts found (8) and so is estoppel, (9) and the question of the proper custody of documents, (10) though whether it is credible whether documents were in a particular custody or whether the facts rebut the presumption of authenticity are questions of fact (11) Construction of a document involves both the meaning of the words and their legal effect, or the effect which is to be given to them. question of fact and the second of law (1) Unsconstruction of a document which is the foundation of a suit is ground for appeal (2). The question whether possession is adverse or not is often one of simple fact, but it may also be a conclusion of law or a unived question (3).

So again on the question of good faith a finding that certain vendors intended by a transfer to defeat their creditors and that their transferee was aware of an impending execution against them are as findings of facts conclusive But the conclusion drawn therefrom that the purchase was not in good faith is an inference of law which is capable of correction in appeal (4) So though a Court of second annual must accent the facts as found, the conclusion to be drawn whether, assuming such facts to be true, a sale did or did not hind persons is a matter with which it is free to deal (5) A notice to quit must be reasonable, and this is a question of fact, but it is a question of law whether there is evidence on which the Court can properly arrive at the conclusion of fact (o) So a conclusion from the fact of one person carrying on business and appearing to he the only partner that there could be no other partner was held erroneous as amounting to an assertion that in no case could there be a dormant partner (7) Where an Appellate Court had found that a grant of pasture-land beld under the special law relating to land tenure in Kumaun was inconsistent with the general wishes and well being of the village community it was held that this was a finding of fact and not to be disturbed by second appeal (8)

Lastly, the finding may not be conclusive because of the absence of reasons for it which are required to constitute a legal judgment (9) But the Court has

Where a Judge states as a fact that an admission was made before him by one of the parties to the suit, the High Court cannot in special appeal inquire whether the Judge was right or wiong in making that statement. If he is wrong, the aggreed party's remedy is by a review of judgment in the Court below and not by special appeal to the High Court. If the Judge erred in supposing the alleged admission to have been made, the party's proper course is at once to bring the error to the notice of the Judge and to apply for a review of his judgment. If he does not do so, the High Court cannot, it was said, assist him in special appeal (3)

"Contrary to law "—The words of the last Code were "some specified" law which term was held to mean specified in the memorandum of appeal and was not limited to specified statute law. The present section omits the word "specified" as being redundant. And now, as herotofore, law is not to be limited in its meaning to statute law (6). This clause generally applies where the Court wrongly applies the law to facts correctly (that is without error or defect in the precedure) found (7), or fails to apply or refuses (8) to apply the law to the case, though of course there may be cases falling within more than one or all of the clauses. A pure point of law which does not depend upon evidence may be dealt with by the Court of Appeal, though no issue was raised as regards it (9). Objection as to the necessity of notice to quit may be taken in second appeal (1) There is no appeal upon the question of the credibility of witnesses when the lower Court's views are based upon inferences from the facts proved or appearing, whether the reasons given be right or wrong (2) While the misconstruction of a document, the foundation of a suit, is a ground of appeal, there is uone because some portion of the evidence may be in writing and the Judge makes a mistake as to the meaning of or effect to be given to it, (3) nor is there properly such a thing as the construction of a deposition of a witness. The word as so used means what the Court thinks is proved by it, and there is no appeal on this point (4) A misreading or misconception of the evidence is no ground for interference in second appeal (5) The bona fides of the parties is a question of fact (6) A special appeal does not he because some portion of the evidence may be in writing and the Judge makes a mistake as to the meaning of it For instance, a writing supposed to contain an admission may be put in as part of the evidence, but a mistake in its meaning is not a misconstruction of a document upon which a special appeal will lie if it is connected with other ovidence affecting its construction. The misconstruction of a document which is the foundation of a suit, and which is in the nature of a contract or a document of title is a ground of a second appeal (7) But to discredit witnesses merely for general reasons not affecting the particular credit of any individual dependent is to commit an error of law which can he subject of a special appeal (8) Thus where the ovidence for the plaintiff was disbelieved because his witness was a relative of his, there was (it was held) an error of law based upon a total misconception of the position of the plaintiff's lessor and substantially affecting the decision of the case on

Discretion when used by a Court must be judicial and not arbitrary, and where a lower Appellate Court has exercised its discretion in a sound and reason able way, after a careful consideration of the facts, and not arbitrarily, the second Appellate Court has no power to interfere (5) But the discretion of a Court is hable to review or appeal where it is not judicial but arbitrary and perverse, caused by caprice or prejudice, or where the discretion is exercised without any proper legal material to support it (6). It has been held that there may be the exercise of so bad a discretion as to amount to an irregularity in law, and on this ground the High Court has looked into the grounds upon which the Lower Appellate Court has admitted an appeal after the lapse of the period allowed by the Limitation Act (7). But probably the correct rule in such a case or its converse is that the High Court will not interfere if the discretiou is judicially exercised, even though the course ultimately adopted be not that which this High Court itself would have taken (8)

The following have been considered matters of discretion —Refusal to summon plaintiff at instance of defendant, (9) passing further orders in regard to plaintiff who disregards Court s summons to attend, (10) refusal to add parties, (11) disallowing additional evidence, (12) or interest, (13) directing

When appeals in analogous cases are pending in a Superior Appellate Court, the Inferior Court of Appeal, if it decide the appeal without waiting for the decision of the Superior Appellate Court in the analogous eases, does not exercise a wase discretion (8)

"Or to some usage,"-Usage having the force of "law" means a local or famdy usago as distinguished from the general law (9) A finding upou the evidence on a question of custom is one of fact (10) The right of user is substantively a question of fact to be determined upon the evidence furnished by the htigants If the Lawer Appellate Court has not made any error of law in drawing an inference from the evidence produced to support such a right, then the High Court in second appeal will not interfere (11) A local usage or custom heing in its nature such as might necessarily affect not only parties to the particular litigation and their privies, but whole hodies of people, stands on a footing similar to a matter of law derived from other sources than usage. So, though this section disallows a second appeal with reference to findings of fact, yet the existence or non existence of a usage having the force of law is unaffected by such disallowance. Consequently it is the duty of the High Court, when it has to pronounce upon that question, to examine evidence bearing upon it, not only as to the sufficiency thereof to ostablish all the elements (antiquity, umformity, etc.) required to constitute a sahd usago having the force of law, but also the credibility of the cyidence relied on and the weight due to it (12) Whether or not a custom exists, is a question of fact. But if the Lower Appellate Court has acted upon illegal evidence or has come to a decision upon evidence as to the custom which is legally insufficient to establish a custom, the High Court can irrest the question as one of law. Again, if it appeared that the Lower Appellate Court has clearly from its judgment disregarded legal evidence, the Court can interfere. But the High Court in second appeal is not hound to examine and consider the evidence in all cases when the existence or non existence of an alleged custom is the sole question at issue (1)

"Failed to determine some material issue"—As to failure to determine a material issue, see cases noted (2) The Lewer Appellate Court, if it does not accept, must displace the findings arrived at hy the first Court (3)

It is impossible to lay down any general rule as to when the Court should consider that the reasens for a particular finding by the Lewer Appellate Ceuit must he stated There may he many cases in which the omission to state the reasons would render the judgment so unintelligible that the Court, in second appeal, could not pronounce any opimon upon whether it was right in law In such a case a Court would no doubt require the reasons to be stated But there may he cases in which the Court would not think it necessary to require them and the case will not he sent hack. It is not the law that when ever the Judge of an Appellate Court thinks that one set of witnesses is trustworthy, he is bound to give his reasons for it (4) Where the Lewer Appellato Court fully adopts the reasoning and the conclusions of the first Court, it is not bound to set out the reasons for its decision with the same fulness as if it was deciding the case in the Court of first instance or as if it was reversing the judgment below It may supply some additional leasons, but the insufficiency of these additional reasons, or the absence of any, would not justify a second appeal (5) When a person has put forward his defence in a general way and allewed an issue to be framed upon it which has been found against him in the Lower Appellate Court, he will not be allewed to say, in special appeal, "here is a question of fact which the Courts below have not

"Upon the merits"—This is one of several provisions in which the Legislature has indicated its intention that substantial justice and not technicality is to be looked to. An error in procedure which does not affect the decision of the case on the merits will not confer a right of second appeal (1). This is a matter which must be determined in each case according to its circumstances. In sect 372 (Act VIII of 1859) the word "possibly" did not occur. It ran as follows "which may have produced error or defect," and the word "may" was construed not to imply "may by some possibility" hut "may not improbably". It was for the High Court Judges to exercise their discretion in determining whether there was such a probability, whether there had been a fair and sufficient trial, and whether higation had reached a stage at which it ought to cease or not. The word "possibly" was accordingly introduced, (2) which avoided any necessity for the consideration of the evidence

Ex parte appellate decree—1 respondent in whose absence an appeal has been heard ex parte and against whom judgment has been given, may prefer a second appeal from the decree under this section, and his remedy is not himted to an application under O XLI 1 2 to the Court which passed the decree to rehear the appeal (3). The objection that the first Court did not make sufficient inquiry before admitting an application for rehearing and setting aside a former ex parte decree in favour of the plaintiff and dismissing the plaintiff is suit should be taken in the lower Appellate Court, and if it is not taken there it can not be raised in second appeal, because it would not be doing justice to restore an ex parte decree which the lower Courts have, on a subsequent trial on the ments, found should not be renewed. If the objection was a substantial one it should have been raised before the lower Court at the proper time (4)

that it must coincide with that of the appeal before the Lower Appellate Court, as the latter should be limited to the case made in the Court of first instance. Ihroughout the litigation the same ground of attack and (save as mentioned) of defence should be put forward. A plaintiff appellant will not be allowed to present his case in an entirely new shape and raising fresh issues to fall back upon a new and different title or cause of action from that first asserted (1).

A case is not to be decided in special appeal upon a question which was not raised or tried or considered by the lower Courts Parties must not be allowed to come before the High Court in special appeal and raise a question or take an objection which, if raised or taken in the first Court or even in the Appellate Court, might have been met in those Courts by adopting a course which cannot be adopted when the case comes before the High Court in special appeal (2) But where there was sufficient reason for the question not having been raised in the lower Courts the ease may he remanded in second appeal with a view to have that question determined (3) An appellant is not entitled to raise a question of fraud which was not alleged in the written statement and us to which no issue was raised in the original Court (4) Where a specific title has been alleged but not proved and the plaintiff endeavours to succeed in the first Court or second Court of appeal upon a title by twelve years' adverso possession, he must be prepared to show that this other title by twelve years' adverse possession was raised in the Court of first instance with sufficient clearness to enable his adversary to understand that he channed to succeed as well by twelvo years' adverse possession as hy tho specific irrelovancy of ovidence,(1) for an erroneous omission to object to the omission of irrelovant testimony does not make it available as a ground of judgment, an objection appearing on the face of a notice (2)

An objection on the ground of misjounder, (3) whether of parties or causes of action, must now under sect 99 show that the ments have been affected

But a mixed question of law and fact cannot be raised for the first time in ascend appeal. So an objection has been disallowed on a question of title, (4) as also that a suit was harred under sect 21 of the last Code the objection being one not of pure law but depending inport the facts (5) and as to the competioney of an agent to sue (6). And defendants will not be silowed to set up for the first time in second appeal a case which involves an inquiry into facts not ascertained in the Court below (7). A question of jurisdiction, or indeed any other question which depends upon a question of fact which has not been determined by the lower Court or admitted by both parties, will not be allowed to be raised (8). It has been recently held that the construction of a document is a question of law which Judges in second appeal are not precluded from considering by any finding of a lower Appellate Court based on such document (9)

A defendant may estop himself from setting up a defence. So a defendant has not been allowed to change the whole nature of his defence at the last moment and to set up in appeal a plea which he has directly and fraudulently repudated in the Court helow (10). should have been called and examined (1) Pirties who allow a suit to be con ducted in the lower Courts as if a certain fact was admitted cannot afterwards in special appeal question it and recedo from the facit understanding (2) And if any irregularity has been committed at the instance of an appellant or with his consent he has no just ground of complaint in appeal (3)

The not taking or pressing an objection in the lower Court may not only satisfy the Court that the parties did not intend to take it as they knew there was nothing in it . (1) but may also act, where facts are involved, by way of estoppel For bad the objection been taken it might have been met On the same principle an objection for the first time in appeal that the plaint did not ask for further rehef has been disallowed, for if taken the plaint might have been amended and may be amended in appeal (5) An objection will not be allowed which, if taken at the proper time, might have been removed (6) On this principle, if secondary evidence is admitted without objection, the Court of Appeal will not entertain an objection that primary evidence should have been given (7) In the case of alleged irregularity it is a safe maxim for a Court of Appeal to be governed by, that an objection, which, if taken, might have been cured, and which was not taken in the Court below, shall not be taken in the Court of Appeal (8) An appellant will not be allowed to raise in the Court of Appeal a point which he did not raise in the Court below, even though there is some evidence in support of it, if the nature of that evidence is such that by any possibility, the respondent might have been able to rebut it if the point had been raised originally (9)

If an appellant in a second appeal was contented, and by his conduct he shows that he elects to take his chance of baving the decree of the first Court confirmed on appeal on the evidence before the Court, he cannot be beard sfterwards to complain in second appeal that there was a material irregularity in the conduct of the case, on the ground that all his evidence was not before the appeal Court which reversed the first decree It is his business to have brought to the notice of the lower Appellate Court that all his witnesses were not examined before the first Court, and not baving done so, he cannot in second appeal, take the objection in order to have the chance of a second trial (10) Such objection, if not raised in the Court below, and if it appears that no application was made to have the witnesses examined the Court of second appeal will not entertain (1) And if the first Court declaring itself to be satisfied with the evidence of any one witness, does not think it necessary to examine any further witnesses whom the plaintiff may have adduced, and the Lower Appellate Court, on appeal not being satisfied with the evidence of that witness, dismisses the whole suit, the High Court on second appeal may send the case back for the examination of witnesses whom the Lower Appellate Court may think fit to examine The fact that the first Court did not think it necessary to examine other witnesses may be brought to the notice of the Lower Appellate Court by the party concerned, or it may appear in the judgment of the first Court (2) If the Court of first instance, being satisfied that the plain tiff's easo could not be established, refuses to examine defendant's witnesses and dismisses the suit, but the Lower Appellate Court, differing from the first Court, gives the plaintiff a decree, the objection that the proceedings before the first Court were irregular should be taken before the Lower Appellate Court, and if it is not taken there the Appellate Court in second appeal will not entertain it (3)

The second Appellate Court is not the Court in which errors of procedim, of the Court of first instance are to be remedied where the error has not been made the ground of complaint in the lower Court and the first Court of Appeal. Thus where any real give ance or other just cause of complaint sinces to a plaintiff from the first Court's refusal to examine his witnesses it is his first duty to bring the matter prominently to the notice of the Lower Appellate Court in his grounds of appeal Failing to do so he cannot he allowed to urge it as a plea in special appeal (4). If either of the lower Courts refuses to entertain any material issue suggested by the defeudant, it would afford him good ground of complaint against their proceedings. But when he did not raise the issue in the lower Courts which he wants to rate in second appeal, he will not be allowed to raise it in second appeal. A party will not be allowed, on special appeal, to go beland the issues hy which he was content to ahide in the Court below (5).

far as the C deutta and Madras High Courts are conceined, that the interpretation to be placed on the decision of the Prvy Council (1) is that this section does not touch the right of appeal given by the Letters Pitcht (2). These decisions consider that of the Prvy Council to be of general application, and proceed upon the construction that the scheme of the Code as to appeals is that they be from one Court to unother, and that therefore this section has no application to a case where the appeal is from one Judge of a Court to the Pull Court (3). As regards other sections it has been held that sect 597 (now 111) of the Code modifies sect 39 of the Letters Pitcht. (1) and that sect 15 of the Letters Patent is controlled by sect 629 (now O XLVII r 7) of the Code, which provides that an order of a civil Court rejecting an application for review of judgment shall be final (5)

is no law in India which renders it imperative upon a suitor to appeal from every interlocutory order hy which he may conceive himself aggreed under the penalty, if he does not do so of forfeiting for ever the benefit of the consideration of the Appellate Court (1) Formerly though no appeal had been filed from an order which was a prelimmary decree within the period of limitation, that order might have been questioned on the appeal from the final decree (2) This, how ever, is not so now, see seet 97 In the case of orders not decrees, an order made under the Code from which an appeal is given under sect. 101 may be questioned under this section in an appeal from the decree in the suit, although no appeal from such order has been preferred under sect 104 (3) The same rule applies where, though the order is not one of those mentioned in sect 104, it is a judgment within the meaning of seet 15 of the Letters Patent Tho order may equally, as in the other eases, be questioned under this section (4) It has been held that where a suit has been remanded on appeal, an appeal from the order after the suit has been taken up by the first Court on remand and finally disposed of will not he and that this classe has no bearing on such cases (5)

(5) Janoki t Promotha, 15 C W N 830 (1911) the order helow was light or wrong goes to the very root of the question as to the party's right to he a party to the proceedings helow, or to come up at all in appeal (1). If an order is non appealable, then it may be questioned under this section subject to the terms thereof. While sect 101 deals with what may be styled immediate appeals from orders, this section is in substance the grant of an ultimate appeal against any order affecting the decision of the case, but making such ultimate appeal contemporaneous with an appeal against the decree (2). It has been held that if there is an appeal against any order made under any rule, there is also an appeal against any order made under part of that rule (3).

Order must be under this Code—This section must he read with sect 104, and should be construed as if the words "under this Code" were inserted between the words "by a Court" and the words "in the exercise of "Io hold otherwise would have the effect of abidishing many appeals given by other Acts of the Legislature, some of which were passed before the Code came into force, for example, appeals from decisions in Companies cases (4) So also an order for attachment for contempt is not an order in exercise of the High Court's oval jurisdiction, and therefore does not come within the provisions of this section—Contempts are in the nature of offences, and therefore inder sect 15 of the Lietters Patent, 1865, an appeal hes from an order of committal for contempt (5)

The section contemplates two things—there being a regular appeal about something else, and in that appeal the insertion in the memorandum of appeal of a ground of objection under this section (6). This section does not enable a litigant to avoid huntation by coming up under this section when the only ground of appeal is an order made under sect 563, now O XLI r 23 (7). No appeal hes where no objection is taken to the decree as regards the ments of the case, those ments having been enquired into (8) but the grounds are solely directed against an interlocutory order passed in the suit (9). Where, however, the order of the lower Appellate Court as to abatement was embedded in the judgment and decree, it was held that objection thereto was properly taken by way of second appeal against the decree. In this case the Court was asked to set aside the decree on the ground that the trial on the ments was contrary to law, but even if the order that by reason of the death of one of the respondents the appeal against her laided were treated as in order in the suit separate from the findings upon which the decree was based (which it was held not to be), then there was an objection that the appeal ought to have abuted altogether and not partially (1)

Order.-The words "prior to decree" which appeared in sect 363 of the Code of 1859, were omitted from the Code of 1877, as from the last and present Code, and thus the section is applicable to orders affecting the decision of the case whether such orders were made before or alter the decree (2) The words "affecting the decision of the case" did not apply to "such orders" in the former section, but to the previous words "error, defect or erregularity" So in an appeal from an ex parte decree in a summary suit upon a promissory note. it was held that an appeal lay from an order made after decree under sect 534 (now O XXXVII r 4), relusing to set eside the ex parte deerce (3) The Court also observed that if the Court made en order to set aside the decree, stay execu tion, and give iceve to the defendant to appear and delend, it "affects the decision," and by refusing to do so it elso "affects the decision" masmuch as it thereby upholds the deerce against the party applying to have it set eside (4) The word "such" has now been deleted The order must be one passed under the Code A decision under sect 5 of the Court Fees Act is not on order under this section (5)

Decree —I he section only applies where there is an appeal from a "deeree' as to the meaning of this term, see notes under sect 2, ante. Where the order appealed from wis not a decree nor an order under sect 588 of the former Code, it was held no appeal lay (6)

Error, defect, or irregularity—These words mean in this section error, defect or irregularity in procedure or in law, and not in matters of fact (7)

"Affecting the decision of the case"—These words mean "affecting the decision of the case with reference to the ments of it" (8) Therefore when an ex parte decree was set aside by an order under seet 108 (now O IX 1 13), and the sut heard upon the ments and disamssed, it was held that such order was not an order affecting the decision of the case under this section, it did

The orders which may be considered under this section are, in short, those by which the Judge may have been misled in deciding the case (4).

The words of the section confer and impose upon an Appellate Court very wido powers, (6) in fact, the same powers as those of the first Court as nearly as may be It was, however, sometimes a question whether the general powers thus stated in the first part of the section were controlled by the second portion, (7) which dealt with the death, marriage and insolvency of parties. This portion has now been removed to O XXII r 13, the object of which is to obviate the necessity of repeating the provisions of the order so as to make them applicable to appeals, and that order is itself stated in wider terrus, being no longer limited to proceedings arising out of the death, marriage or insolvency of parties to an appeal (8) The amended section, disencumbered of the portion referred to, should now make it clear that the powers of an Appellate Court are as nearly as may be the same as those of the first Court; that is, while they are as extensive, they are subject to the same limitations (9) This principle has been held to be applicable to all cases where the Appellate Court has a plenary, and not merely a limited, jurisdiction (10) The first sub clause is new, and has been inserted because it was thought desirable to have in the body of the Code a general pro vision about the powers of an Appellate Court The second sub clause is taken from the first part of sect 582 of the former Code

"As far as may be "-lhese words mean" as far as is consistent with the principles on which appeals from appellate decrees [and orders] are idmitted and determined" In second appeal the Court cannot go into the facts So it was held that no objection could be taken under sect 567 of the last Code (1) corresponding with the present O XLI r 27 So also sect 565 (now r 45 of the same Order) was held not to apply to second appeals (2) So while sects 562 and 564 of the last Code were held strictly binding on all Courts of first appeal, cases frequently occurred in which the Court in second appeal remanded cases for reasons not contemplated in the former section (3) bo the appellate Court has set aside a decree where there was no proper sudement and remanded the case for a decision de noto, (4) and has made a remand where evidence was improperly admitted, (5) and for a finding on an issue (6) Where the first Court dismissed a suit on one of the issues, viz that of title, observing that it was not necessary to decide the other issues, one of which was an issue as to limitation, and the second Court decreed the suit by reversing the finding of the first Court on the issue of title, but omitted to record a finding on the issue of hmitation, the case was remanded to the Lower Appellate Court for findings on the remaining issues (7) And though there was no section strictly authorizing a remand, the Court was held nuder the circumstances warranted ex debito justilie in setting aside the pro ceedings and directing a retrial of the case (8) Sect 587 of the last Code was held to authorize an application to hing in a plaintiff respondent in second appeals and to extend to such appeals the provisions of sects 368 and 58. of that Code (now O XXII r 4, sect 107, O XXII r 11) (9) It was, however, subsequently held, though the Allahabad and Calcutta High Courts dissent, that the reference to sect 582 in the Limitation Act did not include by implication second appeals referred to in the section corresponding to this (10) This section may be read with sect 582, now 107 ante, O XXII r 11, post (11)

Appeal to His Majesty in Council.—This matter is dealt with both in the above sections and in O XLV. The provisions are substantially the same as in the last Code. Sects 613-615 of that Code have not been re-enacted, and r. 4 and 5 of O XLV. are new.

In the Common Law of England must be found the origin of the jurisdiction of the Sovereign in Council, but the Statute Law has recognized and aftirmed such jurisdiction. In 1726, by a charter granted by George I, an appeal lay in the case of the Mayers' Courts to the Governor or President in Council and in important eases (1) to the King in Council The appeal to the Privy Council from the Court of Sudder Dewany Adam ut (which the High Court on its appellate side represents) was granted by 21 Geo III c 70. The power to admit an appeal was first conferred upon the Sudder Dowany Adamlut by Reg. XVI of 1797, seet 2 (2) In 1833 the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council was created,(3) and by orders of Her Majesty in Council of the 10th April, 1838, passed in pursuance of 3 and 4 Wilham IV e 41, certain restrictions were placed upon the exercise of the power of the Sudder Dewany Adamlut to admit an appeal The practice of the Calcutta High Court in the admission of appeals has been regulated by rules of the Court made by the Sudder Dewany Adawlut on the 17th December, 1858, and by the High Court on the 30th July, 1870 (4) The Charter Act of 1861 (24 and 25 Vict. c. 104) substituted the High Courts of Calcutta, Madras, and Bombay for the Supreme Courts established under the Charters of 1774, 1800, and 1823 respectively Tho Rules now in force have been assued under the powers vested in the High Court by 24 and 25 Vict c 104, sect 13, by the Letters Patent of the High Court, 1865, and by the Code of Civil Procedure These Rules came into force from 1st July, 1891 (5) The right of appeal to the King in Council now rests on clanse 39 of the Letters Patent of 1865, read with sects 103 and 110 of this Code, and O XLV (1) Though appeals from the High Courts in India are regulated by positive Statute, yet the Severeign in Council possesses by virtue of the Royal Prerogativo a clear appellate jurisdiction over the judg ments of all Courts of Justice established in any of the British dominions beyond the seas, and notwithstanding the express statutory rights of appeal from the decisions of the High Courts, it has been repeatedly held that, notwithstanding the statutes which prescribe the time and mode of appealing and the limits in point of amount, the power of the Sovereign in Council to entertain petitions for leave to appeal where the conditions imposed by the Statute have not been complied with, remains in full force. The jurisdiction was exercised in 1862 in an appeal from Oudh, where there was no positive Statute law, Regulation or Order in Council applicable to the idmission of appeals from the Court of the Judicial Commissioner of Oudh to Her Wajesty in Council (2) Thus also it is quite discretionary with the Judicial Committee to admit an appeal in eases far below the appealable amount mentioned in the Statutes and long after the period prescribed by the Statute for filing a petition of appeal in India has expired Such petitions have been admitted and have led to reversil of the judgment of the Courts below But the High Courts have no power to allow or cutertain a petition for leave to appeal, or to stay execution or to take security for costs of an appeal, except strictly in accordance with the terms of the Statute or with any order the Privy Conneil may make in the particular case (3) The Judicial Committee act only as advisers to the Crown and not is a Court of Indicature (4) and 'humbly recommend' their conclusions to His Vajesty But a commission appointed by the Governor General for the purpose of inquiring into the truth of an imputation against a Chief and of reporting to the Governor General in Council how far the same was true to the best of their judgment and belief was held to be a · commission appointed by the Governor General himself for the information of his own mind in order that he should not act in his political and sovereign character otherwise than in accordance with the dictates of instice and equity, and not in any sense a Court or if a Court not a Court from which an appeal lay to His Majesty in Council (5) Nor is there any appeal to His Majesty in Council from the Courts of Assistant Political agents Political agents in Kathia war or from the decision of the Governor of Bombay in Council (6) By the terms of the Charter (and also the Code) the appeal given is confined to Judicial acts namely from decrees and orders though special leave may be granted by the Privy Council (1) Thus it has been held by the Privy Council that no appeal hes to it under the Land Acquisition Act (I of 1894) sect 51. since au award by the High Court under that Act is neither a decree under sect 2 of this Codo nor a decree, final judgment or order within the meaning of the Letters Patent, but is the last of a scries of arbitration proceedings (2) Where a matter has been referred by His Majesty to the Judicial Committee which is not strictly an appealable grievance, their Lordships of the Privy Council may, under the reservations contained in 3 & 4 William IV c 41 advise His Majesty to grant the petitioner leave to appeal (3) Special leve to appeal was given in a case against an order made by the Judges of the Supreme Court of Madras dismissing the Master of that Court from his office for alleged official misconduct, hecause the order was not made in the course of a judicial proceeding (4) But in Ex parte Robertson (5) it was held that the Judicial Committee have no juris diction to take into consideration the propriety of the dismissal of a public servant, who held his office during pleasure nuless the matter is expressly referred to them by the Crown Following this case it has been held that the Privy Council bave no jurisdiction to grant special leave to appeal against an order of the High Court at Calcutta under sect 26, clause (2) of Beng Reg V of 1831, dismussing a Ministiff for corruption in the exercise of his functions as a Judge (6)

As stated, the King in Council, by virtue of the Royal Prerogative possesses an appellate jurisdiction over the judgment of all Courts of Justice established in any of the British Dominions beyond the seas, and it is quite discretionary with the Judicial Committee to admit an appeal in cases far below the appeal able amount mentioned in the Code, and long after the period prescribed for filing a petition of appeal in India has expired (7) Thus when the High Court in India has refused the necessary certificate, the aggree ed party may present a petition for the exercise of the prerogative right of the Crown to admit an appeal and the Judicial Committee in a fit case, will advise His Majesty that leave to appeal should be allowed on the usual terms as to security. In a fit case their lordships will advise His Majesty to grant (8) an order staying proceedings where the High Court in India refused to make such an order on the ground that the Code gave them no jurisdiction over the subject matter pending an appeal not certified by themselves (9) As a rule in cases under the appealable amount hefore special leave is petitioned from His Majesty in Council an application should be made to the High Court for a certificate that the care is nevertheless if t one for appeal (10)

Special leave, by the Privy Council, when granted.—The Privy Council will not advise His Majesty to exercise this prerogetive end to give special leave to appeal unless there is some substantial question of law of general interest involved (1) The petition for special leave to oppeol is not by way of appeal from the decision of the Court, but it is presented for an exercise of the preiogative right of the Crown to adunt an appeal Although it is not an appeal, it is perhaps a more convenient proceeding than an appeal because the Privy Council can then grout leave on any other ground, if other ground appears for the indulgence that is sought, and if it finds that, in a care in which the appeal is claimed as of right, the Court below has refused the certificate for a reason which appears to them to he an unsound reason, then they will advise His Majesty to admit the oppeal (2) The Privy Council is not bound by the provisions of the Code. Thus where in on appeal to it by one of the defendants, it set aside a decree of the High Court and restored that of the first Court, and it appeared from the wording of the decree of the Privy Council that the defendants generally were entitled to hove the benefit of the decree, held that the defendants generally were entitled to the benefit of the decree though there was no common ground such as is referred to in the Code (3)

Special leave without requiring further security -Where the High Court passed a separate decree on a cross appeal, identical in terms with those of the decree possed on oppeal in the same suit, and granted leave to oppeal in one and refused it in the other, their lordships granted special leovo without requiring further security thon had already been taken by the High Court (4)

Leave to appeal, granted without authority—special leave granted —An objection that an appeal hos come before the Judicial Com mittee without proper outhority, viz thot the leave to appeal should not have been given, ought to be taken at the earnest moment, for the obvious reason that the great expense of proparing for the hearing is thereby saved, which is uselessly incurred if, when the objection is ultimately taken, the Privy Council feel obliged to yield to it, but it is clearly competent to the Judicial Committee to hear such an objection at any stage of the appeal, and it is not unfrequently heard when the appeal is called on and before the arguments on the ments have commenced (5)

Special leave to appeal—contents of the petition —Such a petition should contain a full statement of the facts and legal grounds showing that there is a substantial case on the merits, and a point of law involved proper to be determined by the Privy Council Thus, where the statements contained in the petition were of a too general character to enable the Privy Council to judge of the propriety of granting the special leave prayed for, their lordships ordered that the petition should be either dismissed, with liberty to present another petition, or stand over to amend the petition (1) If a serious question of law is involved in the appeal, special leave will be granted by the Privy Council, though leave had been refused by the High Court (2). Special leave has been refused in the following caves—merely because the Judge had omitted to record any reason while grunting a review, which he should have done, (3) and where the High Court dismissed an appeal as harred by huntation, the Judicial Countities not being satisfied that the refusal of the High Court to admit the appeal out of time was wrong (1).

Rescission of special leave to appeal -Where there is an omission of any material facts, whether it arises from improper intention on the part of the petitioner or whether it arises from accident or negligence, still the effect is just the sinic if the Court has been induced to make an order which, if the facts were fully before it, it would not, or might not, have been induced to make (5) So an Order in Council made upon an ex parte application granting special leave to appeal upon an allegation as to the value of the property in dispute was rescinded, where there were ourssions in the petition of proceedings in the suit, which showed the true value of the property Generally an Order in Council obtained upon an ex parte petition, which ounts to state the true facts, will be' discharged with costs but if there has been laches in applying to discharge the order on the part of the respondent no costs will be given (6) Where special leave to appeal is granted upon a petition in which material misstatements are made, objections should be taken by the respondent by a prehimmary motion to rescind the leave to appeal, or at any rate before the hearing of the appeal, when called on, has been entered on Where it is not clear that the material misstate ments in the petition had been made with an intention to deceive, and tho chieetion to the appeal is taken at a late stage of the hearing, the Judicial Committee may decline to dismiss the appeal, but refuso the appellant the costs of the appeal But if their Lordships are satisfied that the misstatements were intentionally made to decrive them, they will, even at a late stage, dismiss the appeal (7)

Powers of High Court after admission—The question has arisen and been answered affirmatively whether the High Court after the admission of an appeal to the Privy Council, his amy further authority in the suit, and competence to do any judicial set relating to it. Thus on the death of a party on the record of an appeal pending before the Privy Council, evidence must be given in the Court from which the appeal has been preferred of the representative character of the person or persons by or aguinst whom revivor is sought. Court below should give its own opinion as to who are the parties who should he substituted upon the record, and should make and send a certificate or statement on which their Lordships can set (1) When only the petition for leave to appeal has been filed and before it is allowed, the High Court has jurisdiction to entertain applications relating to the appeal (2) Further, if the appellant has taken no steps towards prosecuting the appeal, the petition of appeal may he struck off the file by the High Court (3) The Judicial Committee have no jurisdiction to entertain any application in an appeal until the netition of appeal is lodged there, though the transcript has been registered in the Council office (1) If after the admission of the appeal no steps are taken by the appellant within reasonable time, the Judicial Committee, upon a certificate of the Registrar of the High Court that no further proceedings have been taken after the admission of the appeal, will dismiss it (a) It was considered that an appeal to the Privy Council having once been admitted, whether properly or erroneously, the High Court had no further jurisdiction to review its order and declare the appeal rejected (6) But in a later case Prinsep J , held that an order granting leave to appeal to the Privy Council was open to review (7) And an order refusing leave to appeal to the Privy Council can be reviewed by the Court which made it (8)

Rehearing of appeal by the Privy Council -It is unquestionally the strict rule, and ought to be distinctly understood as such, that no cause in the Privy Council can he reheard, and that an order once made, that is a roport submitted to His Majesty and adopted, by heing made an Order in Council, is final, and cannot be altered. The same is the case of the judgments of the House of Lords, that is, of the Court of Parhament, or of the King in Parliament as it is sometimes expressed, the only other supreme tribunal Whatever, therefore, has been really determined in these Courts must stand, there being no power of rehearing for the purpose of changing the judgment pronounced Nevertheless, if by misprision in embodying the judgments, errors have been introduced, these Courts possess, by Common Law, the same power which the Courts of Record and Statute have of rictify ing the mistakes which have crept in It is impossible to doubt that the indulgence extended in such cases, is mainly owing to the natural desire prevailing to prevent irremediable injustice being done by a Court of the last resort, where by some accident, without any blame, the party has not been heard, and an order has been madvertently made as if the party has been heard Under the peculiar circumstances of this case their Lordships recommended the restoration of the appeal dismissed cx parte (1) Even before report, whilst the decision of the Board is not yet res judicata, great crution has been observed in permitting the rehearing of appeals (2) After the respondent has had notice of a pending appeal, he is not entitled to further notice that the record has been transmitted or that the appeal is set down for hearing, and he cannot ask for a rehearing of the appeal on the ground that he had no such notice (3) The unusual judulgence of recommending a re hearing of an appeal to His Majesty ought never to be granted except under very special circumstances, and only where the cx parte hearing has not been occasioned by any default in the party applying for a re hearing (4) An Order in Council rescinding a previous Order in Council, granting special leave to appeal, may be discharged and the appeal restored (5) Also an appeal dismissed for want of prosecution (under Rule 5 of the Order in Council of 1853) has been restored on explanation of delay meurred and on conditions as to costs and sceurity to be given in England (6)

Appeals from decision given on second appeal—In an appeal to the Privy Council from a decree of the High Court made on a second appeal, the hearing before their Lordships minst be based upon the materials which were open to the High Court, and the findings of the Subordinate Judge on matters not involving questions of law must be taken as conclusive, (7) and in such cases the findings of fact by the first Court are binding on the Judicial Committee (8)

Concurrent judgments on fact—The Judicial Committee will not interfero with concurrent judgments of the Courts below on pure matters of fact, (9) unless very definite and explicit grounds for that interference are assigned,(1) and it is satisfied that there is miscarriage of justice or the violation of any principle of law or procedure (2) But where there are concurrent findings of facts and there is no substantial question of law in issue, their Lordships, in order to see how for the Courts have concurred in their view of the facts, will examine precisely what their findings are (3) Where the Courts in India have come to a certain conclusion on a certain issue, that is a fact which, considering the advantages the Judges in India generally possess, of forming a correct opinion of the probability of a certain transaction, and in some cases of the credit due to the witness, affords a strong presumption in favour of the correctue's of their decisions, yet that circumstance does not and ought not, to reheve the Judicial Committee, the Court of last resort, from the duty of examining the whole evidence and forming for itself an opinion on the whole case (1) But the duty of a Court of ultimate appeal is to judge from the evidence and not to infer from probabilities (5) In a recent case where in a mortgage deed a fictitious entry had been made (which if correct would have brought it within the jurisdiction of the Cilcutta High Court), and there was no evidence that there was an error it was held by the Privy Council that concurrent findings of error were not findings of fact, since a decision that there is no evidence to support a finding is a decision of law (6)

The Judicial Committee has refused to depart from the rule as to con current findings of fact, merely because the High Court has admitted documents tendered by the appellant which the first Court had rejected (7) It cannot detract from the weight of concurrent findings of fact, that different Courts in arriving at the same result upon the same evidence, have not been influenced by precisely the same considerations. A difference of opinion to that extent is only calculated to suggest that the evidence, whatever view be taken of it, must necessarily lead to one and the same inference, and there will be no interference by the Privy Council in such cases (8) Where no question of law, either us to the construction of documents or any other point, arises on the judgment of the High Court, and there are concurrent findings of the two Courts below on the oral and documentary evidence submitted to them, their Lordships will not entertain an appeal (9) When the question is not one of construction of one or more deeds, which would be a question of law, but is a question as to the effect to be given to decrees, leases and other documents as evidence of certain facts (eg that of adoption and its consequences), the concurrent findings against the factum of the adoption will not be disturbed merely because the evidence largely consisted of leases and other written documents (1)

The well known rule of the Judicial Committee not to disturb concurrent findings of fact by the lower Courts, unless they are shown to be erroncous, sone the less applicable, although the Courts may not have taken precisely the same view of the weight to be attached to each particular item of evidence. Thus their Lordships declined to disturb such finding where one Court relied on the oral and the other on the documentary evidence (2) In boundary cases the appellant must come prepared to show clearly where the decree appealed from is wrong, and what other course is right, it is insufficient to raise doubts as to the correctness of the decision (3)

It has been recently held that the provisions as to concurrent findings on fact would be misconstrued if the Judges in India were by implication subjected to tha duty of making their narrative of circumstances minutely exhaustive, under the penalty of being presumed to have overlooked elementary considerations (4)

The Judicial Committee will not, on the ground that there was some imperfection in the pleadings set rade the decree of a High Court, when the High Court were right on the ments of the case (5) Nor will their Lordships allow any now point to be taken for the first time in the Privy Council (6)

Reversal of decree on preliminary question entry into merits—
In Fischer v Kamala Naicker (7) it was arranged, in the commencement of the argument, with the consent of the counsel on both sides, that if their Lordships should be of opinion that the decision of the Court below could not be sustained ou the grounds on which it had been based, they should proceed to consider the whole case on its merits, and finally dispose of it. And their Lordships, being of opinion that the decision could not be sustained on the grounds on which it had been based, considered the whole case on its merits and dismissed the appeal without costs asymmy that is they dismissed the appeal on wholly different grounds from those rehed on by the Court below the dismissal should be without costs

by the Judge, the costs of uppeal should be directed to be costs in the cause (1) in the case (2) cited their Lordships, while remanding the case, ordered that if the respondent fuled to appear in the High Court, or if the appeal should be decided against him, the respondent should pay the appealar's costs of the appeal in England, and the costs (if any) paid under the decree of the High Court were to be repaid to him. When an appeal is heard ex parts in the absence of the respondent and it is dismissed, the respondent is entitled to costs up to, and including the lodgment of his printed case, and also to the costs of appearance for applying for the same (3)

Pauper appeal —In an early case (4) leave to appeal in forma paupers was granted on an application to the High Court on an unstamped paper, but certified by counsel that there was reasonable ground of appeal. It has been recently held that the High Court cannot entertain an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council in forma paupers and to be exonerated from depositing the respondent's costs and the usual fees (5). The question whether it is necessary to apply for leave to prosecute an appeal in forma paupers in England although the Courts in India admitted such an appeal, was referred to in Yunni Ram v Sheo Churn (6).

Appeal pending, effect on rights of owner—The pendency of an appeal to England does not put the party who subject to that appeal is the owner of an estate under a legal disability to bring a suit in that character against third parties (7)

Decree —This term is defined in sect 2 (2) and under that definition a decree may be either prebininary or final. The distinction between the two is pointed out in the explanation to that section. Under sect 97, parties agginered by preliminary decrees are required to appeal therefrom. Sect 594 of the last Code ran as follows. 'decree includes also judgment and order. (5) Decree now includes a final order. Clauses (a) and (b) of sect 595 of the last Code spoke of "final decrees. Sect 109 now speaks of any decree or final order. Apparently then, an appeal will be from a decree which may be either final or preliminary and from an order which is final. This is in accordance with previous decisions. A final decree was always appealable. And the Privy Council held that 'final for this purpose did not ment the last.

decree but a decree determining rights finally, such as a preliminary decree establishing the liability to account and directing accounts to be taken (1) In the case cited it was said that, to decide whether a decree is final or not, the Court should look at what was the real question before the Court when the decree was made Where the plaintiff alleged that the defendant was accountable to him upon several claims, and the defendant alleged that he had got legal defences to every one of those claims and that he was not accountable at all, and the Court held that the legal defences put forward were valid as to some of the claums, and as to others of the claums they were invalid and therefore the defendant must account, and presed a decree for account, such i decree directing accounts was held to be a "final" decree under the list Code (2) "It is true," said Lord Hobbouse, "that the elected that was made does not declare in terms the hability of the defendant, but it directs accounts to be taken which he was contending unght not to be taken at oil, and it must be held that the decree contains within itself in assertion that, if a balance is found against the defendant on those accounts, the defendant is bound to pay Therefore the form of the decree is exactly as if it affirmed the hability of the defendant to pay something un each one of these claims, if only the arithmetical result of the account should be worked out against him. Now that question of liability was the sole question in dispute at the hearing of the cause. and it is the cardinal point of the suits. The irithmetical result is only a conse quenco of the liability. The real question in issue was the liability, and that has been determined by this decree against the defeudant in such a way that m this suit it is final. The Court can never go back agoin upon this decree so as to bay that, though the result of the account may be against the defendant, still the defendant is not liable to pay anything That is finally determined against him, and therefore in their Lordships' view the decree is n final one within the meaning of the Code (3)

An order of remand, where the first Court has disposed of a suit ou a preimmary point, is not a final, but an interlocutory decree (4). But where a remand was made under the wrong section and the order of the High Court decided a cardinal issue in the suit, which could never, while the decision stood, be disputed again, there was held to be a final decree, notwithstanding that there might be inquiries yet to be made in disposing of the suit, e.g. where the High Court, reversing the decree of the first Court held that a valid bequest was made by a will and remanded the case for the trial of other issues (1) Where the High Court aftermed the lability of the appellant, which could never be questioued again and was the cardinal point in the suit, (2) an appeal was held to be (3) Where a candidate at an examination for pleadership was erroneously declared by a notification in the Government Gazette to be qualified for admission as a valid of the High Court, but when the mistake was found out the notification was cancelled, on application for leave to appeal, held that Chapter XLV of the last Code had no application, and that the matter was not one in which the High Court was concerned to give or refuse leave to appeal (4) Where, after the admission of an appeal to the Privy Council, the Court below passed a judgment in review in the same case, which judgment was sent up and notified to the Council, and put on record in the appeal case, it was held open to the Judicial Committee to pass judgment on the appeal, without prejudice to the subsequent judgment which was based on review (5)

Final order.—As regards orders made prior to decree which are only 50 many steps towards the ultimate decree, they may be styled preliminary or interlocutory, and in this sense not final By final order is apparently meant an order which terminates the proceedings in favour of one of the parties (6) In the ease cited, Markby, J, said "I do not know any meaning to the word 'final' which can be applied to orders made subsequent to decree" Sed qu Such an order cannot, it is true, possess finality in the senso in which that term is opposed to orders which are steps towards the decree, for the decree has ex hypothess been made, but the order may be final as terminating the particular proceedings in which it is made, and the final character of such orders is recognized in sect 2 with reference to matters determined under sect 47, ante (7) It has been held that the question of finality must be determined with reference to the precise relation in which it stands to the proceedings before the Court (8) It is not always easy to distinguish between what is a final and what is an interlocu tory order The Court of Appeal (in England) has not attempted to give an exhaustive definition, and the Legislature in the Judicature Act, 1875, sect 12 has not given such a definition (9) Sect 2, clause (2), Explanation, of this Code, says that a decree is final when the adjudication completely disposes of the suit "No order, judgment, or other proceeding," says Brett, L J ,(10) "can be final which does not at one affect the status of the parties, for whichever side the decision may be given, so that if it is given for the plaintiff it is conclusive Lamst the defendant, and if it is given for the defendant it is conclusive against the plaintiff" "I conceive," says Fry, L.J. "that an order is final only where it is made upon an application of other proceeding which must, whether such application or other proceeding fail or succeed, determine the action Conversely, I think that an order is 'interlocutory' where it cannot be affirmed that in either event the action will be determined" When any further step is necessary to perfect an order (1) or judgment, it is not final but interlocutory (2) A judgment may be either final, or preliminary, or interlocutory, the difference between them being that a final judgment determines the whole cause or suit, and a preliminary or interlocutory judgment determines only a part of it, leaving other matters to be determined (3) An order dismissing a petition, presented under the Indian Companies Act (Act XII of 1895) for confirmation of the Appeal under Letters Patent not falling within the Code—Where, by an Order in Council, a case was remitted to the High Court with a direction to take an account between the parties on certain principles, and it was further ordered that if, on the taking of the accounts, anything should be found due to the plaintiff, a decree should be made in his favour, and if nothing should be found due to him the suit would be dismissed, and when the case came back to the High Court, a Division Bench tool, the accounts and made a decree against the defendants, held that sects 595, 596 of the foimul Code did not apply to such a case, but a right of appeal to His Majesty in Council might be successfully claimed under clause 39 of the Letters Patent, the amount in dispute being over Rs 10,000, because it was a final decree of a Division Court of the High Court from which an appeal did not be to the High Court under clause 15 of the Letters Patent. The expression "a Division Court" in sect 39 (it was held) did not apply only to a Division Court sitting on the original side (3)

"Passed on appeal."—This does not mean the same thing as any order passed in the exercise of appellate junisdiction. So an order rejecting an application to review a judgment passed on appeal is not an order made on appeal from which an appeal lies to the Prevy Council (4). Nor is an order rejecting an application to amend a decree, (5) nor is an order refusing to admit an appeal presented beyond the presented period (6). Two essential elements to be considered in deciding whether an order is one passed in appeal are whether the relationship of a Superior and an Inferior Court exists, and whether the Superior Court possesses the power to review, affirm or modify the decisions ($\frac{1}{16}$) order passed by the High Court in the exercise of its revisional jurisdictic excet 115 or its power of superintendence under sect 15 of the High Court of 1851 is made or passed on appeal within the meaning of this clause (8) 12

"In the exercise of original civil jurisdiction."—There is no right of appeal from a decree made by the High Court in the exercise of original jurisdiction, if an appeal will he to the High Court itseff under clause 15, but there is a direct appeal from a decree made in the exercise of original jurisdiction by a Division Bench of two Judges. There is no appeal, under clause 10 of the Letters Patent, to the Prvy Council from an interlocutory judgment or order of a Judge of the High Court te g an order for inspection of documents), until such judgment or order has been subjected to an appeal to the High Court, under clause 15 of the Letters Patent, except in those excess, in which, by reason of the number of the Judges whe have made such order, an appeal under clause 15 is given directly to the Prvy Council (1). There is no appeal against the decision of a High Court has ed on appeal from an award of compensation made by the Court to which a reference had been made under sect. 18 of the Laud Acquisition Act, for such a decision is an award (2).

by law had been passed, can be certified to be a fit case on the ground that the financial and commercial position of the Company may be seriously affected by the questions at issue, and also that it is of great importance to Indian Compames generally that their rights should he precisely defined on this point The value of the question at issue between the parties, in such a case, is one to which it is impossible to give a numerical expression (1) No appeal hes from the judgment of one Judgo of the High Court, or of one Judge of a Division Court, or of two or more Judges of the High Court, where they are equally divided in opmion (sect 111) But in any such case an appeal should be made in the first instance to a Division Bench of the High Court under clause 15 of the Charter, hefore an appeal can be preferred to His Majesty in Council (2) The question whether an applicant had established that substantial loss might result to him if execution was not stayed pending the hearing of the appeal presented to the High Court is not a question which would justify a special certificate of fitness under this clause (3) Sections 17 and 18 of the Provincial Insolvency Act (III of 1907) do not interfero with any right of appeal to the Privy Council (4)

Conditions imposed on right of appeal (Sect 110),-This section requires that in order to give a right of appeal there must be in dispute either directly or indirectly an amount of Rs 10,000 If the decree affirms the Court helow, another condition is affirmed, namely that the appeal must involve soms substantial question of law The presence of such a question does not give a right of appeal, when the value is below the mark The requirement of it restricts the right when the higher decree affirms the lower (5) When it is laid down that the decree must involve, directly or indirectly, some claim or question to or respecting property of Rs 10,000 in value or upwards, the reference is to suits in existence and not to suits in gremio futuri (6) The reason for fixing the minimum appealable value is based on the principle of not allowing the litigants, who have not succeeded in the High Courts, to he harassed by further appeals, when there is nothing at stake but small amounts of moncy (7) But to meet special cases, not satisfying the conditions mentioned in sect 110, such for instance as those in which the point in dispute is not measurable by money, though it may he of great public or private importance, an appeal may be granted under sect 109, clause (c), when the High Court certifies that the case is fit for appeal "otherwise," that is when not meeting the conditions of sect. 100 (1) The mere assent of the respondent to an appeal cannot give to the appealant a right of appeal which the Code does not allow nor can it sustain a certificate which is obviously erroneous (3) The defendant will not be allowed to make a new case based on grounds which were not urged in the Courts in India nor specified in the petition to the High Court for leave to appeal nor suggested in the reasons contained in the case for the appellant (3)

"The amount or value."-The section incorporates the provisions of the Privy Council Appeals Act of 1874 (4) This does not mean the value as estimated for the payment of stamp duty, but the real or market value The stamp duties imposed for fiscal purposes are calculated on a certain rule fixed hy law, but the right of appeal depends on the value, which is a matter of fact (5) The words "The value of the subject-matter in the Court of first instance" do not in any way affect the right of appeal when the real value of the subject matter is Rs 10,000 (6) The Court has only to look at the value of the question at issue in the higation (7) As regards the Court of first instance the section speaks of the value of the subject-matter of the suit, and as regards the appeal to the Privy Council of the matter in dispute There is a distinction between the two, (8) what is such matter depends on the facts of each case (9) "And" in the first clause of sect 110 means "and" and not "or " Thus where the value of the subject matter of the suit in the Court of first instance was helow Rs 10,000, held hy the Privy Council that this section did not apply, for the case must comply with both conditions to justify the admission of an appeal (1) To determine the value the decree is to he looked at as it affects the interests of the party prejudiced by it. Where the detriment to the party seeking rehef is estimated at less than Rs 10,000, the amount of the matter in dispute in appeal is not of the prescribed value (2) In suits for partition the value is that amount of the whole estate which it is sought to partition, and not merely of the particular share which one of the parties may claim (3) The value of mesne profits subsequent to suit is to be taken into consideration in calculating the appealable value (1) In actions of tort where the damages are at large it is not easy to define the value (5) In a suit to enforce a mortgage security the value is the amount claimed if such amount falls short of the value of the mortgaged property, but it is the value of the property if this is exceeded by the amount due under the mortgage (6) Where the appeal is from the whole deerce, and the decree has given an amount, including interest up to the date of the decree, which exceeds Rs 10,000, it is clear that the matter which is in dispute in the appeal must exceed the sum of Rs 10,000, for the question to be tried upon the appeal must be whether the decree is or is not right, ¿ c whother the decree has or has not properly ordered payment of a sum exceed ing Rs 10,000 Where, therefore, at the date of the judgment, the sum which 13 1ccoverable is an amount (including interest) exceeding Rs 10,000, there 18 an appeal to the Privy Council But interest accruing subsequent to the date of the decree cannot be added by the High Courts in estimating the appealable value, and it is a question for the discretion of the Judicial Committee, whether such interest should be added or not (7) But the costs of a suit are no part of the subject matter in dispute, and cannot be used for the purpose of estimating the appealable value, if they were allowed to be added to the principal sum claimed, it would be in the power of every higant, by swelling the costs, to bring any suit up to the appealable value (1) If a certificate he granted or leave to appeal given by the proper Court in India in a matter in which they have no jurisdiction, the Judicial Committee will dismiss the appeal as meompetent. But if an appeal is competently made, and it appears to their Lordships after argument, or is admitted at the Bar, that the greater part of it must fail, it is the constant practice of their Lordships to give relief in respect of the portion in which the appellant succeeds, notwithstanding that the subject matter of that portion of the appeal may be less than the prescribed hmit. Thus where a certificate was given in the presence of the parties that the value of the matter in dispute on appeal exceeded Rs 10,000, but the appellant's counsel, being satisfied that the appeal could not succeed as to the whole demand, had by his printed case and at the Bar, confined his argument to the question of a sum below Rs 10,000, held by the Privy Council that the value of the subject matter on appeal was not reduced below Rs 10,000 (2) It was held in the case of a large number of suits tried together and dealt with in one judgment that masmuch as although, if each case were taken separately, the value was below Rs 10 000, yet if taken collectively the aggregate reached that amount and the cases were all dependent upon the same judgment leave to appeal should be given (3)

Or the decree must involve "directly or indirectly '-It is not enough that the question decided by such decree is a question of title which may possibly affect the title of persons not parties to the decree, to property not the subject-matter of the suit in which the decree was passed and concerning the title to which property there is no litigation pending (4) In a recent case, however, where the value had been over Rs 10,000 in the Court of first instance and less than that sum on appeal to the Privy Council, but the decision by the Privy Council would suvolve the validity of an award concerning larger sums at was held that a certificate should be granted and that it was not necessary that a dispute respecting other property to a value of more than Rs 10 000 should be pending at the time of the application (5) As to whether such a claim is or is not involved must depend on the circumstances of each case, (6) as to the consolidation of suits, see O XLVI r 4

the Court helow Can a "decision" be said to be affirmed when, although the "decree" is upheld, the High Court in its judgment disagrees with the findings of the fact of the Court below? There is no definition of the word "decision" in the Code, but this word means the decision of a suit by the Court, or the decree, and not the "judgment," ie the statement of the grounds on which the Court makes a decree Thus, when a decision is affirmed it is not necessary that the Appellate Court should not only affirm the decree made by the Court below, but should also affirm the grounds of fact upon which that judgment was passed Where an Appellate Court dis missed an appeal, but the reasons given by it in respect of some matters of fact were not the same as given by the lower Court, it was held by the Puvy Council that the decree of the lower Court had been affirmed by the Appellate Court The words "decision of the Court" in this section mean the decree and not the judgment (1) A petitioner for leave to appeal claimed Rs 77,000 odd as the value of the land taken under land acquisition proceed ings The Collector assessed the value at Rs 28,287, the Judge upheld the Collector's award On appeal to the High Court (valuing the speeal st Rs 49,000 and odd, 10 the difference between the Collector's award and the amount claimed) the High Court allowed the petitioner an additional sum of Rs 7000 On an application for leave to appeal it was held that the decree was a decree of affirmance of the first Court's decree, and there being no substantial question of law, leave was refused In giving judgment the Court said, "No doubt, in one sense it may be said that this Court did not affirm the decision of the Court below But we must look to the substance of the case What 15 the decree from which the present applicant now desires to appeal to the Privy Council? He desires to appeal only against the decision of this Court so far as it affirmed the decision of the Court below, nothing else This seems to be, in substance, as far as the subject matter of appeal goes s decree of affirmance If the decree of this Court had been properly drawn, it would have dismissed the appeal except to the extent that the additions sum was given (2)

"Substantial question of law"—In the first place it must appear that the question is one of law (3) It does not follow that hecause it would be such a question in Ingland it is so here. the Judge draws the proper inference from the findings of the jury. In that sense the question is a question of law. But where the case is tried without a jury there is really nothing but a question of fact, and a question of fact to be determined by one and the same person Where the Courts in India come to the same finding about the existence or non existence of reasonable and probable cause there is a concurrent finding on a question of fact, and no certificate, under sect. 600 certifying that the appeal involves a substantial question of law, should be given (1) Where no question of law, either as to construction of documents or any other point, arises on the judgment of the High Court, and there are concurrent findings on the oral and documentary evidence, no appeal will be entertained (2) Where the order allowing leave to appeal ran, "There seems to be a point of law, which, however, does not appear to have been argued here," the appeal was dismissed as the leave was granted contrary to the provisions of the Code (3) The question of law involved must be a "substantial" (1) one, which in the easo eited was suggested to mean a question of great public or private importance (5) Whether, however, the question is "substantial ' or not must depend upon the circumstances of each ease, and the reported decisions are of value only as illustrations of the application of the general principle. The construction of a deed of Hebanama was hold to be such a question (6) flut the rejection of an application for admission of additional evidence in the Appellate Court is not (7) The Ifigh Court bes refused an appeal upon a mero question of practice such as on order for inspection of documents (8) Lastly if there is a point of law which is elso "substantial ' it must be "intolical ' in the appeal The word 'involvo" implies a considerable degree of necessity. It does not mean that in certoin contingencies a question of law might possibly arise. The proctice of the Privy Council is not to interfere with concurrent findings of fact of the Courts below (9) If the Ifigh Court is right in holding that there are concurrent findings of fact the inference is that the Privy Council will decline to go behind these findings No doubt it was held by Pontifex, J (10) that the

(b) to have failed to exercise a jurisdiction so vested. or

(c) to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregularity, the High Court may make such order in the case as it thinks fit.

Revision.-The revisional power has been held to be not an inherent power, but one conferred by statute; and that while a power of super intendence is given to the High Courts over all Courts, the revisional power in the case of each branch of jurisdiction is the creation of separate and distinct legislation.(1) Jurisdiction has been generally divided into original (whether ordinary or extraordinary) and appellate jurisdiction. Differing views have been held upon the question whether the power of revision under this section, and of superintendence under clause 15 of the High Courts Act. 24 & 25 Vict. e. 104, comes or does not come under the head of appellate justs diction.(2) In the former view, the capital distinction is between juris diction which is original, and jurisdiction which is not original, irrespective of the circumstances and conditions in which the latter is to be exercised. Appellate jurisdiction may thus be exercised in a variety of forms—as in what is commonly known as appeal, revision, or superintendence (3) In the latter view, appeal, revision, and superintendence, though distinct from original jurisdiction, come under different heads of jurisdictions-viz. appellate, revisional, and superintending (4) The Code of 1859 gave the Courts no revisional powers. By clause 15 of the High Courts Act, 21 & 25 Vict c. 104, which was pas ed on August 6, 1561, each of the High Courts which were thereafter to be established under that Act were given a power of superintendence over all Courts subject to their appellate jurisdictions. The Presidency High Courts were not established until the roug of their first Letters Patent in 1862; but before that date, Act XXIII of 1861. which was passed on August 22th of that year, gave in sect 35 powers of respoon in a very restricted form to the Sudder Court Under that Act, the Sailder Court might call for the second of any case decided on appeal in which no further appeal has if the Subordinate Court, on hearing the appeal. appeared to lave exercised a jurisdiction rot vested in it by law. When, therefore, the High Courts were established, among the powers vested in it were those of revision given to the Sudder Court under sect 35 of the Act of 1861, which is the lesis of the present section (!) The power of revision was thus limited to cases decided on appeal where the lower Court had exceeded its jurisdiction (2)

The question then arose as to the nature of the jurishiction given by clause 15 of the High Courts Act It was held by a I ull Bench of the Allahabad ligh Court that the Letters Patent conferred no powers of toxision, that in such matters the High Court had only such powers as the Sudder Court had, and that the power of "superintendence ' conferred by the High Courts Act gave the Court no revisional power no power to interfere with or set aside the judicial proceedings of a Subordinato Court, but that clause 15 conferred on the High Court administrative authority and not judicial powers (3) In a subsequent I'ull Bench of the same Court (1) the Judges said that they would mefer not to use the terms "administrative authority" or "judicial powers," or "judicial superintendence," as without giving exhaustive definitions of the words which it might fail to do the Court might by using them lead to future difficulty and that each case must be considered as it arose That the authority of the High Courts under this clause is not merely administrative, appears from a decision of the Privy Council approxing the judgment of the Calcutta High Court, which, holding that it could laterfere with orders passed without jurisdiction, stayed proceedings on one order and quashed another (5) There has been no doubt a disinchantion, and rightly, on the part of some Judges to rigidly define what they can or cannot, do by way of their powers of superintendence, which have been said to be very wide (1) Certain limitations have, however been laid down which will ordinarily govern the Courts, there being a residue of undefined jurisdiction to which the Court may have recourso in cases of an unusual character (2)

Sect 622 of the Code of 1877 was the same as that of the last Code, except that the words "or to have acted in the exercise of its jurisdution illegally, or with material irregularity," were not in it. It thus extended the power of revision, which was no longer limited to eases deended on appeal, and which might be exercised not only where the Court exceeded its jurisduction but declined a jurisduction which was vested in it. Lastly, by sect 92 of Act XII of 1879, the words italicised were added, since when the section retained the same form. As regards the amendments now effected, which are of an unimportant character, vide post

As regards the Charter Act, it has been held that the High Court interfere where the Court has wrongly declined jurisdiction,(3) or his exceeded its jurisdiction,(4) that is in the first two contingencies mentioned in this section. It, however, the Court has jurisdiction it will not (ordinarily at least) interfere merely because the order passed in such jurisdiction is erroreous either in law or fact (5). An erroneous decision by a Court having jurisdiction can only proporly be corrected by appeal, and if the right of appeal does not exist the same results which an appeal would give cannot be arrived at indirectly (6). While these rules are of general application in cases of an ordinary character there is a residue of jurisdiction which the Courts have left undefined. So where the Court had jurisdiction to entertain a suit, but passed a decree therein which was contrary to law and was incapable of execution, the High Court interfered to set matters right (1) Generally, the High Court will direct a Subordinate Court to do its duty of to abstain from taking action in matters of which it has no cognizance (2) It will direct it to do that which is legal, and correct that which is illegal in its proceedings (3) and will correct abuse of powers by a Subordinate Court (4)

From the above review of the case law it will appear that to a large extent clause 15 and this section cover common ground. In neither case will these extraordinary powers he exercised where matters can he corrected by appeal In neither case (in that of the Charter ordinarily at least) will the Court interfere in such a way as to give a party the henefit of an appeal when the law says that he is not to have one. In both cases the Court will inter fere where jurisdiction is concerned. The section applies also expressly to cases of illegal exercise of jurisdiction and material irregularity. It will therefore be, as regards judicial matters, only necessary to resort to the Charter Act in cases in which the revisional powers given by the Civil and Criminal Procedure Codes do not apply, (5) or where it is doubtful (6) whether they do apply hy reason of the nature of the proceedings sought to he corrected, (7) or where the order passed in pioceedings which considered apart from the matter complained of are subject to the ordinary revisional powers is of a very peculiar character (8) or in cases where the administrative authority of the High Court is required to be invoked. Courts in the exercise of superintending powers will not ordinarily interfere except in cases of grave and otherwise irreparable injustice (9)

As regards other revisional jurisdictions, the Bomhay High Court has interfered under Reg II of 1827 (Bom) (10) Sect 25 of the Provincial Small Cause Courts Act (IX of 1887) provides that the High Court for the purpose of satis fying itself that a decree or order made on any case decided by a Court of Small Causes was according to law (11) may call for the case and pass such order with respect thereto as it thinks fit. the ground that the relationship of landlord and tenant had not been established, and it had been held by a single Judge sitting on the Original Side that (assuming that this refusal was erroneous) the High Court was not justified in interfering under this section, it was held on appeal that the High Court had a right of sevision and that this order was a judgment (1) It is generally agreed that this provision gives no right of appeal either on law or fact, (2) that the exercise of the power given is discretionary,(3) and that the High Court will be slow to interfere when substantial justice has been done, though technically the plaintiff or defendant may have a legitimate ground of attack or defence (4) It is also established that there is no rule that a Court cannot get under sect 25, except in cases in which it might act under the present section (5) The High Court's power of interfering in revision conferred by the Provincial Small Cause Court Act is wider than the power conferred by the present section (6) The Allahahad High Court has, however in several cases considered that the discretion to be exercised under sect 25 should be ordinarily guided by the same considera tions as those which governed the application of this section (7) though a Judge is not absolutely bound to refuse any application under sect 25, which could not be admitted under the present section (8) The Bomhay High Court how even. has held that the provisions of the present section do not afford a safe guide for the exercise of jurisdiction under the Provincial Small Cause Court Act, since the wording of the two sections is wholly different that of the Small Cause Court Act being of the widest description and conferring the most ample discretion on the High Court, whilst this section ought to he construed in ? restricted and limited sense (9) What the order should be where the Court determines to interfere must depend entirely on the eircumstances of the case (10) Sect 4S of the Guardians and Wards Act is subject to the provisions of this section (11)

High Court.—The power of revision under this section belongs to the High Court only, it being intended that it should be exercised in correction only of such errors as were not open to appeal, and within certain specified limits (1) Under the Charter Act the Chief Justice determines what Judges shall constitute Benches to hear suits and applications (2)

"May call for."-The section gives di cretionary power to the High Court to interfere or not (3) In the case cited below, (4) Sir Arnold White, CJ, stating that he "would be glad to find some mode of escape," yet considered that if ho was satisfied that the Court of first instance or Court of Appeal had exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law, ho was bound to interfere and exercise the powers conferred by the section This, however, it is subinitted, is not so The word "may" governs the wholo section, and indicates a discretion whether the ground upon which interference is sought is one of jurisdiction or illegality, or material irregularity, and the concluding words are, that the Court may pass such order as it thinks fit So where an order was passed without jurisdiction, but no objection was taken before the District Court, the High Court declined to interfere, as if it were to set aside the order of the District Court it would have the effect of placing the opposite party in the position of being obliged to hring a suit to establish the right which he claimed, though the period within which he was entitled to bring that suit had clapsed , in other words, it would be placing him under an obligation to hring a suit that prima facie would be harred under the Limitation Act (5) So also in an earlier easo tha Calcutta High Court observed as follows -" Now, as the order of the Judge in this matter, although passed without juri diction, was really a right order, and had merely the effect of getting rid of the decision of the first Court, which was wrong, we think we ought not to make any order in this case '(6)

A fortion the same freedom exists as regards illegalities and irregularities. So the High Court, in the under mentioned case, (7) declined, under the circumstances, to interfere, even though the orders complained of were made irregularly. Thus a Munsif granted a review on a ground on which it was held it could not legally have heen granted. His order in review, however, had the effect of making the decree wight, instead of a wrong decree. The District Judge allowed an appeal from that order on grounds which, having regard to seet 629.

of the last Code, were, it was held, not open to hum. On application for revision of this Appellate order, it was held that the proper course was to set aside only the District Judge's order, and to leave standing the order of the Munsi granting a review, which order, though wrong in principle, was, it appeared, right in its results (1). In an application under this section, the extraordinary jurisdiction is invoked, and the Court must be on its guard against its being abused, merely because the lower Court has fallen into formal error (2). Again, the Court does not interfere if the result of any irregularity on the part of the lower Court has been to promote the justice of the ease (3). In short, it is this justice of the case and not any mere technicality which will influence the Court's interference. It has been held that the Court cannot interfere under this section on the ground that an order is inexpedient (4). Assuming that the section applies, the Court is not hound to act under it in every case (5).

As the power is a discretionary one, the Court may refuse to interfere where there has been laches or delay in moving the Court, (6) inasmineh as delay, in less explained, is evidence of absence of real injury and ground for complaint, and may, where it is considerable, prejudice the position of the opposing party, and if by his laches a party has failed to avail himself of other remedies open to him, he has no claim to invoke the extraordinary jurisdiction of the Court. The Court will, in all cases, regaid its exercise of the extraordinary jurisdiction as discretional, and subject to considerations of the importance of the particular case, or of the principle involved in it, of delay on the part of an applicant, and of his merits with respect to the case in which the interference of the Court is sought (7)

The Court will not, as a rule, interfere in revision with an exercise of discretion, though it may not approve of it (8). It was held that even if a party were not entitled to appeal to have a decree against him set uside, the error of the lower Court could he corrected under this section by a direction to exercise the discretionary powers given by sect 554 of the last Code (9)

The High Court can interfere under this section of its own motion, and without an application inside to it by a party to the sunt (1) Revisional power has been exercised on the application of a pre-emptor in regard to a sale, (2) of a Collector in regard to an order under sect 412 of the last Code, (3) and on the report of a District Judge (4) But the High Court will not interfere on a reference by the Collector with a Mamlatdar's decision in a possessory suit. The aggree of party can hunself apply to the Court (5)

"Any case"—The watter must be a civil one, and also one in which there is no remedy by way of appeal. Mahmood, J, was of opinion that the word should be understood in its broadest and most ordinary sense, including all adjudications which might constitute the subject of appeal or rovision (6). It has, however, been a matter of dispute whether the section applies to interlocutory orders when there is an appeal from the final decree. The Calcutta High Court has held that there is nothing in this section which prevents the High Court from setting isside an interlocutory order, and that the word "case" is wide enough to include such an order, and the words "records of any case" include so much of the proceedings in any suit as relate to an interlocutory order (7). The Bombay,(8) Allahabad,(9) and Madras (10) High Courts answer the question in the negative, and in a recent case in the Calcutta High Court to question has been considered doubtful (11).

It may be that the word "case" is wide enough to include an interlocutory order, but it must be controlled by due regard to the purpose with which this section was framed, which was to enable the party to a suit to get a decision or order of a lower Court rectified where there would otherwise be no remedy It is on this ground, therefore, that it has been held that an application under this section cannot be entertained in the case of those interlocutory orders against which, though no immediate appeal lies a remedy is supplied by sect

The High Court has revised, under this section, proceedings under Reg of 1806, relating to forcelosure, (2) adjudications under sect 407 of the last Code, (3) an order under sect 335 of the same Code, though provisionally final, (4) an order under the Bombay Hereditary Offices Act, (5) an order under sect 5 of the Religious Endowments Act, (6) an order under sect 195 of the Code of Cruniual Procedure, (7) a lunacy matter (8) Whether in order under the former sect 310a was subject to appeal or revision depended on the circumstances of each particular case (9) A decision under sect 5 of the Court Fees Act is not a decision in a case within the meaning of this section (10) The matter of amending a decree does not by itself constitute a "case," but forms part of the proceedings in the suit in which the decree is made (11) On the same principle, viz the order being of an inter locutory character only, the High Court has refused to deal with an order relating to an award, (12) though in other cases relating to awards it has interfered (13) It has been held that an order passed under the Legal Practitioners Act is not a criminal proceeding, nor one within the powers of civil revision (14) Semble, that it was the intention of the Legislature that the Court which originally heard a case should be the Court to decide whether an application to review its former judgment should, or should not, be granted, and where that Court rejects such an application, its decision should not be open either to appeal or to revision by a higher Court (15) Iu a recent Full Bench decision of the Calcutta High Court, the case of an order passed by a Civil or Revenue Court under sect 476 of the Criminal Procedure Code was considered, and it was held that sect 439 of the Criminal Procedure Codo did not apply, and that the High Court could exercise

the powers vested in it by this section and by sect. 15 of the High Courts Act, and that the Beach excreising Criminal Juri-diction could not (as such) deal with the matter on revision, but could be specially authorized to do so by the Chief Justice under sect. 11 of the High Courts Act (1) An application under this section to set aside an award is incompetent (2). A decision of a Subordinato Court on a question of a blustion determining the amount of a Court fee is, not withstanding its declared finality, subject to revision under this section, and sect 5, Reg. If of 1827 (3). Proceedings under sect. 206 of the former Code terminated in an order, and could thus he dealt with in revision (4). Sect. 153 of Act X of 1859 does not preclude revision by the High Court of an order of a Collector, which is final within the meaning of that section (5). An application to a Judgo of a Presidency Small Cause Court for sanction to prosecute a plaintiff for making a fulse claim in a suit before him is a case within the meaning of this section (6).

"In which no appeal liea."—The Court cannot act under this section where there is an appeal, (?) even where the petitioner has to invoke the provisions of sect 5 of the Limitation Act (8). The reason of the rule is that there is another and more complete remedy. It is a matter of dispute whether in the case of interlocutory orders, against which there is no immediate appeal, the Court can interfere under this section, seeing that a remedy is supplied by sect 105, which provides that such orders may be made a ground of objection in the appeal against the final decree. In such cases it is said the appeal is merely deferred (9). In a recent case it has been doubted whether interlocutory orders como within the scope of this section (10).

On the same principle it has been held that the Court will not exercise its rovisional jurisdiction so long as there is any other remedy open to the petitioner, viz by regular suit or otherwise (11) Probably it is more correct to say that there is no absolute rule in the matter such as exists in the prohibition relating to appealable cases, and that while the Court will in general discourage applications under this section when some other remedy has been provided, the exercise of the revisional powers is discretionary according to the circumstances of the particular case. In some cases justice, therefore, may require the Courts interference (1)

Sect 588 (now 104) by enacting that the orders passed under it shall be final only bars appeals from these orders, but does not intend to bar any interference with them by revision (2)

In some cases, where an appeal was preferred but no appeal lay, the Court has dealt with the case as though an application has been originally made to it under this section and allowed the appeal to be treated as an application under it (3). Conversely, a civil revisional petition has been treated as an appeal on the Court fee being paid (4). It seems reasonable that appellants should be permitted to rely on the provisions of this section without putting them to the expense of making a separate application to get the benefit of it (5). Some Indigs, however, take a structer and more formal view of the matter, and require a separate and distinct application to be made (6). It is as well, therefore in cases of doubt whether an appeal lies to file concurrently (7) both an appeal and an application under this section to be heard and disposed of together.

"Suboidinate."—The Court referred to in the words "If the Court" of the former section was a Court other than the High Court The section therefore did not apply to a case where the order of which review was sought was made by the High Court (2) It applies to subordinate Courts as the amended section now makes clear. The High Court has jurisdiction under this section over the Presidency Small Cause Courts, and applications can be dealt with by a specially constituted Bench (3) or, according to the existing rule in the Calcutta High Court, by a single Judge sitting on the Original Sude (3) This section applies to a Mamlatdar's Court in Bombay, (5) and a Court acting under the Dekkan Agreediturists Rehef Act, (6) and the Court of the Resident at Aden in the excresse of his everly jurisdiction under the Aden Act (7)

A decision under sect 5 of the Court Fees Act is not, it has been held, (8) the decision of a Court within the meaning of this section. A District Judge and the first sect 23 of the Bombay District Junicipal Act Amendment Act (II of 1884) is not a "Court" under this section, and the High Court has therefore no jurisdiction to revise his order refusing to set aside an election (9) Notither is a Collector acting under sect 11 of the Land Acquisition Act "a Court" (10). This section does not apply to a Revenue Court in Madras, (11) or in the North-West Provinces (12). The High Court at Bombay under clause 29 of the Council Order relating to Zanzibar of the year 1897 has power of revision over all the Civil Courts of Zanzibar (13).

Jurisdiction —The word "jurisdiction' is used in two different senses it may either mean what is ordinarily understood by the term "jurisdiction"—that is, jurisdiction local, pecuniary, personal, or with reference to the subject-matter of a suit, (14) or it may mean the legal authority of a Court to do certain things, to make a particular order in a case over which it has jurisdiction in the sense stated. So if a Court has juri-diction to deal with an appeal in the former sense, it is only in the litter sense that an erroneous order of remand by an Appel lite Court can be treated as an order without purisdiction (1) It was held in the case first cited that the word "jurisdiction" is used in the former sense in sect 578 of the former Code (non 99) In some cases at has been held that the term is used in both senses in the pre ent section (2). In other cases it has been said that the word "jurisdiction" is used in the first mentioned sense and refers to the forum for the institution of a suit (3) It would probably tend to clearness in the law if the word were used in the nirrow and more ordinary sen e,(4) though, is his been pointed out, (5) the extent to which the restraints attaching to the mode of exercise of paradiction should be included in the conception of the jurisdiction itself is a question of nicety upon which there has been consider able difference of judicial opinion A Judgo cannot assume as a matter of law that which in fact has no existence in law, and so give himself jurisdiction. He cannot, by wroughy determining a que tion, give himself juri diction, and the High Courting thus inquire whether such question is rightly or wrough decided (6)

On the principle omnia rite acta, the Court will not presume that a Judge has acted without jurisdiction (7) Indeed, it has on the contrary been said, that unless the facts from which want of jurisdiction on the part of a Subordianto Court may be interred are pitcul upon the face of the record, the High Court will not interfere in revision (8) The High Court may interfere where the lower Court appears to have exercised a jurisdiction not vested in it by law (9) or to have

Illegality -The first part of the section down to the words "so icsted" deals with jurisdiction. The remainder assumes the existence of jurisdiction. but deals with the mode in which such jurisdiction is exercised. A question may arise whether a Court in the exercise of the jurisdiction it possesses has acted according to law. Such a question relates not to the existence of jurisdiction, but to the exercise of it in either an illegal or irregular manner (1) This distinction has not always been preserved, it being in some earlier cases considered erroncously that the Privy Council had decided (2) that only questions relating to the jurisdiction of the Court can he entertuned under this section (3) This opinion, however, is not tenable, since it practically treats the additional words added to the section in 1879 ns superfluous or unnecessarily introduced (4) All that the Privy Council case really decides is that this section does not give a right of appeal on questions of law or fact, and that where the Subordinate Court has jurisdiction, the High Court can only interfere where that Court has acted illegally and with material irregularity in the exercise of such jurisdiction (5)

A Court cannot interfere under this section simply upon the ground that there has been an erroneous decision upon a question of law or fact (6) A Court that has decided a suit over which it had jurisdiction cannot, only on the ground that it has arrived at a wrong decision, be said to have exercised its jurisdiction illegally or with material irregulanty (7) Any other view would impose on the other cases the clause may be applicable (1) This is a question of difficulty, upon which there has been considerable conflict of opinion. There may be a decision which is erroneous, but not illegal or materially irregular (2) It is not always easy to draw a clear hine between an illegal exercise of jurisdiction and a mistake of law (3). A distinction has been drawn between an irregular act and an erroneous decision (1) but the distinction is, ordinarily at least, of little use, as the illegal or irregular act is generally preceded by, and based upon, an erroneous decision

It is not difficult to give examples of extreme cases. The difficulty exists as to those falling within these limits. Thus, a wrong decision hased upon an erroneous construction of sect 11 that a surt is not barred by res judicate is no ground for revision, (5) hut a Jindge would not illegally who, while admitting that a case fell within the section, held that as the former decision was erroneous, he would no this ground determine the point again, (6) or if he directed, contrary to the provisions of sect 60, that in execution of a decree the tools of a judgment delitor he sold (7). So it has been held that this part of the section contemplates a perverse decision on a question of law or procedure—that is a decision involving a conscious departure from some rules of law or procedure (8)

The Calcutta High Court has gone further, and held that while acting with "material irregularity" implies only the committing of an error of procedure, acting "illegally" does not mean the saine thing for Courts may commit gross and palpable errors other than those of procedure which would justify it being said that they had acted "illegally," and that this part of the section was intended to authorize the High Courts to interfere and correct gross and palpable errors of Subordinate Courts, so as to provent gross injustice in non-appealable cases, and that it was advisedly expressed in indefinite language from the difficulty of defining exactly the classes of cases which may stand in need of such extraordinary interference. In this view, the question whether any case comes under the clause has to be determined with reference to the grossiess and palpablences of the error complained of, and to the gravity of the injustice resulting from it (9).

Coming to the particular application of the section, the following cases have been expressly held, or may perhaps be considered to have been held, to come under the heading of acting "illegally"—the rule of adjudication being that a Judge was held

Irregularity,-Just as in the reported cases, questions of illegality are mixed up with those of jurischetion, so it is not easy always to distinguish " illequitty" from "material erregularity . In fact as will have been seen from the notes to the last paragraph, the Courts have often spoken of the same act as being both an illegabty and irregularity. A distruction has been drawn between cases in which a Judge omits to do something which a Statute quacts shall be done, and cases in which a Judge does something which a Statuto says shall not be done. In the former case, the omission may not amount to more than an irregularity in procedure. In the latter, the doing of the prohibited thing is ultra tires and illegal and without jurisdiction (14) using the latter term in its broadest sense. It has been said also that material "trequlardy" implies only the committing of an error of procedure, whilst acting "ellegally" means something more (15) One thing is clear, namely, that an irregularity is something less than an illegality, and before the Court will interfere

Certain cases of what has been held to be material irregularity will be found noted in the commentary on "acting illegally" Other reported eases are determining an issue which does not really arise in the case, and basing the decision on such determination, (1) omissions or errors of procedure in the investigation of a matter, such as the omission to comply with the procedure prescribed by sect 3 of Act XIX of 1811, relative to curators. (2) entertaining and granting an application under sect 108 of the last Code, without notice to the other side, in contravention of the directions of sect 109 of the same Code , (3) determining a suit upon an issue which was not one on which the dispute between the parties could be properly adjudicated upon . had power to make takes to regulate the procedure of the original side of the Court, and High Courts and Chief Courts had power to make rules to regulate the procedure of Courts subordinate to them, but neither High Courts nor Chief Courts could make rules to regulate min matters which were dealt with by the Code of Civil Procedure, nor could they in any way affect the provisious of that Code. The power which is given to the High Court in England and other countries was denied to the High Courts in India, with the result that there could be no elasticity in matters of procedure which fell within the ambit of the Code, and that defects in the existing practice could only be remedied, when discovered, by the dilatory process of legislation.

This may have been proper at the time the Code was first cureted, but it has been rightly considered that there is no reason nowadays for denying to the ligh Courts the power to regulate these numer matters of procedure a nower which they are far more connetent to exercise than the Legislature In the present Code, therefore, the Legislature has enlarged the rule-making nowers of the High Courts and Chief Courts, and vested in them the authority to make changes in minor matters of procedure. This is done by placing the sections of the Code relating to these matters in the first Schedule, and giving to the ffish Courts and Chief Courts power to vary or amend the rules in the Schedule, or to make additional rules on inatters which are specified in the Code The result follows, that the rules in the Schedule provide a precedure for the present, but that that procedure can be altered at any time, and from time to time as seems fit to the Courts It has been thought desirable that in exercising these wider powers the Courts should have the advice of representatives of the two branches of the legal profession, and accordingly it has been provided that rules should only be made after taking the opinion of a Rule Committee composed of three Judges of the Ifigh Court, a Judge of a subordinate Civil Court, and of three other members appointed by the respective Chief Justices or Chief Judges, one representing the Bar, the other the Vakals or Pleaders, and the third the attorneys It was believed that a Standing Committee of this kind would be of great value Provision has been made for the appointment of a permanent Secretary to conduct the routine work of the Committee, and, as is hoped, to assist in drafting rules for them

The division between matters which should be dealt with in the Act and matters which should be left to rules is not easy to determine on any logical basis.

Matters which affect more than one province, and matters in which it is essential that there should be uniformity in all provinces, have been kept in the Act innor matters have been relegated to the Schedulc. But between these two classes there are many matters as to which opinions may differ whether they are proper subjects for rules or not. It is probably impossible to devise an arrangement which would disarm all entiressm, but that adopted in the Code is the best that presented itself at present. It may be said against this innovation that it will create divergence of practice between the various provinces and that this will cause confusion. The answer which has been given is that the divergence will be only in minor matters, and that even in this divergence there may be advantages. The conditions and requirements of provinces differ greatly. A rule of procedure which may be proper in Cakutta may be cutively mappropriate in the Punjab. It is desirable that the general principles of procedure should be imiform all over India, but no harm can result from a divergence in the practice in Judges' Chambers, or in the particular form of plants or interrogatories.

It may also be objected that the plan of putting some of the provisions activing to any particular subject in the Act and others in rules will lead to confusion. This is an objection which applies to ull rules made under statutory authority: but it is one which it is hoped will have little force in this particular case as soon as practitioners have become familiar with the altered system.

The rules suggested in the Schedule to the draft will be found to depart to no very considerable extent from the last Code, though important amendments have been made. The subjects of counterclaim and garmshee orders which were included in the earlier Bill, have been omitted from the Schedule They raise questions on which there was no which the requirements of different potential theoretical three forces been thought better not to make

India, but to leave it to the Courts of each province to introduce them by rules if thought advisable. Power is given in the rule making section for these purposes. With sect 122, compare first paragraph of sect 652 of last Code, with sect 128, O. III r 6, and with sects 129-131, the second, third, and fourth paragraphs respectively of sect 652 of the last Code. New rules published since the date of the last cities are collected in the Appendix.

High Court rules.—These sections correspond with certain modifications with the second, third, and fourth paragraphs of sect 652 of the last Code. The section paragraph of that section was added by sect 63, Act VII of 1885, and the last two paragraphs by seet 2, Act XIII of 1895. Rules made and published under this section have the force of law. Hence, it was held that where an application for execution was not accompanied by a copy of the decree of which execution was sought, the application would not be treated as a step in aid of execution within the meaning of the Limitation Act (I). The rule must not, however, be ultra arrest, (2) and no rule, it was held, could add to or modify the conditions and hindations of the law Ind down in the Limitation Act (3). It has been recently said by a Full Bench of the Madras High Court that, until such new Rules are made, it is probable that the Rules made made the last Code should be considered as in force (1). As regards paragraph (1) of sect 653 and the High Courts, see sect 122, ance.

Women —This is the only section which deals with the exemption of women (1) from personal appearance in Court —The privilege is limited to the class of persons described in the section, and eannot be claimed by all women of rank (2). It has been designed for the protection of purdanashin —The words "who according to," etc., were held not to apply to a case of a Parsi widow who alleged that according to Parsi eustoms she could not leave be house for two years after her husband's death, the custom being of a varying and uncertain character (3). But a Court, independently of the section, would always have regard to such circumstances as were put forward in that case (12 the alleged custom, age, and health of the applicant, and her desire to leave the jurisdiction) as an excuse for non attendance (4). See notes to O XVIII r. 4 and O XXVI r. 1

Exemption from appearance -Act VIII of 1859, sects 22, 23 The exemption is absolute, and not limited to cases in which the party claiming it has been summoned by the opposite party A Rajah instituted a suit under Act X of 1859 through an agent appointed in that behalf The Deputy Collector, not being satisfied with the information which the agent could give, adjourned the hearing to a subsequent day, and required the personal appearance of the Rajah The Rajah claimed to be exempted, but the Deputy Collector refused the application, and dismissed the case. It was held that the Rajah was not bound to attend, and the suit was wrongly dismissed (1)

(3) Nothing in sub section (2) shall enable a judgment debtor to claim exemption from arrest under an order to immediate execution or where such judgment debtor attends to show cause why he should not be committed to prison in execution of a decree.

Exemption from arrest.-The pivilege is not that of the person mentioned and for his personal henefit, but of the Court, and is conferred for the purpose of ensuring the due administration of justice (1) A case not governed by this section must be determined upon the principles of English law, on which this section rests (2) The validity of a commitment hy a Court of inferior jurisdiction can be inquired into, and if it be found that a person was, when committed by such Court, entitled to privilege from arrest he will be released (3) Where plaintiff, a resident of Bengal, went to Madras on the 24th October to attend a case which, however, was adjourned for seven weeks on the 27th October, and while waiting in Madras for the suit to come on was arrested on the 10th November, he was directed to he released (4) In a sust under Chapter XXXIX of the last Code (see now Order XXXVII), when the defendant is not allowed to defend without leave, a defendant appearing in Court for that purpose is privileged (5) If there is no bone fides on the part of that person that his attendance is required he has no privilege (6). The privilege being that of the Court, he cannot, when arrested for contempt, claim privilego (7) Tho privilege attaches only when going to, or attending, or returning from a tribunal Therefore, where an insolvent who was wrongly imprisoned was arrested on his release from tail, it was held that he could not claim privilego (8)

"Tribunal" is a comprehensive term intended to cover Criminal as well as Revenue and Civil Courts, (9) Insolvency Courts, (10) and arbitrators (11) The words of the section are now as under the last Code not " from arrest under the Code," but from arrest "under civil process" (12)

141. The procedure proceed in this Code in regard to suits

Miscellaneous proceed shall be followed, as far as it can be made applicable, in all proceedings in any Court of civil junisdiction.

Procedure for miscellaneous proceedings.—The object of this section, which corresponds with sect 38, Act XXIII of 1861, is to make applicable to proceedings other than suits and appeals, the procedure, so far as it is applicable, which is adopted in suits and appeals. An appeal, however, is a substantive right and not a mere matter of procedure. This section, therefore, does not confer any right of appeal where it does not exist under the Codo or any other law (1). The right of appeal must be given by statute conferring that right(2). If, however, a right of appeal is given by law, then the procedure in such appeal will be that laid down by the Codo (3).

Proceedings other than suits—The procedure applicable during the learing of the suit until decree is provided for by the Code, as also that applicable in execution of or appeal from the decree. This section in the last Code did not on its true construction apply to execution of the decree, and was inapplicable to potitions for execution before, and independently of, the passing of sect 4, Act VI of 1892, which amended it by expressly declaring that it was not applicable to such cases (1). Prior, however, to the Amending Act it had been held, in a number of cases, that all execution proceedings should, for the purposes of this section, be treated as miscellaneous proceedings (5).

All such cases, in so far as they proceed upon the ground that this section of the last Code was anulicable to execution proceedings, must be considered both as overruled by the Privy Council and superseded by the Amendment of 1892 introducing the Explanation Under the Code as it stood after the introduction of the Explanation to a 107 of the last Code this section does not apply to execution proceedings (1) The Amending Act, VI of 1892, by making this section mannheable in proceedings for the execution of decrees, deprived the Civil Courts of the power to apply by analogy to proceedings for the execution of decrees, the procedure specifically prescribed for proceedings in suits at a stage prior to decree, and hunted the procedure which could be applied under the Code in proceedings for execution to the procedure which is expressly, as in Chapter XIX of the last Code, or by implication, prescribed for proceedings for execution, or at the execution stage of a suit (2). The explanation has now been omitted, but presumably the law remains the same (3) It has recently been held by the Calcutta High Court that the explanation was only omitted because it had been rendered superfluous by the decision of the Privy Council in Thakur Prasad v Fakir ullah (1)

Chapter XIX of the last Code did not, however, contain a complete procedure for proceedings in execution (5) and where this was the case the matter might have been disposed of under the inherent power of the Court (6). Thus it was held that a Court had inherent power, if not conferred by statute, to dismiss an application for execution when the applicant fails through his own laches to put the Court in a position to proceed with his application, as also to proceed fortbuilt to decide an application for execution of a decree on the materials before it, when time has been granted to a party to perform any act necessary for the further progress of the application. and that either by summary process of execution of the appellate decree of reversal or by a new suit (1)

The Court has, independently of the statutory power conferred on it, an inherent (2) power in this respect. It is both its right and duty to prevent its proceedings being made the cause of injustice and therefore to order the restitution of the thing improperly taken, and generally to restore the party to the position he would have occupied but for its erroneous order since reversed. The Codes, subsequent to that of 1859, provided for restitution, and the cases under them extended the operation of the words of the Statute as defined in the present amended section. The first clause of the section has been re-cast so as to bring it into closer conformity with the existing practice, and the second clause has been added

It is immaterial whether the erroneous action of the Court was due to carrying into effect a wrong decree or whether it was due to execution proceed ings wrongly conceived for the purpose of carrying out a right decree. In either case the Court, upon the error being ascertained, is bound, so far as it can, to place the aggrieved party back in his original position, and to take means not merely to restore to him the property of which he had been wrongly deprived, but also to give him compensation for such loss as he had thereby sustained. It is competent to the Court in the course of the execution proceedings to afford the aggreeved party this remedy in full (3). Where a clummant under the former section elected to put forward his claim to meson profits in execution proceedings, and the claim was dismissed and he acquiesced in the dismissal and did not appeal, the order of dismissal was held a bar to further proceedings in respect of the same claim, so long as it remained univerversed (4).

The High Court of Calcutta has power under clause 15 of the Charter to order the Court of first instance to enforce restriction of the amount realized from the defendant in excess of the amount allowed by the Court of Appeal, and also to execute that part of the decree which awarded costs to the defendant (9)

The High Court made an order dismissing an application for leave to appeal to the Privy Council with costs—Held, that though there was no section in the Code directly applicable to the case, yet by analogy to this section the proper Court to execute the order as to costs was the lower Court (1)

The section was held applicable by analogy to proceedings before Courts of Revenue (2) It has been held that the principle of this section cannot be extended to the case of a decree which has been set aside under sect 108 of the last Code (now represented by O IX r 13), for such a decree cannot be revived by any subsequent proceeding (3)

"Decree."—The former section provided for restriction to which a party was entitled under a decree passed in appeal under Chapter XLI of the last Code it was held therefore not to apply where the benefit claimed was not granted in an appeal, but in a review setting aside the decree of the Appellate Court itself (4) But in such a case the Court might, in the exercise of its inherent power, or treating the application as one for execution of the decree passed on review, order restitution (5) Nor on the same grounds did the section apply where the decree under which the benefit was sought was an order of the Privy Council, (6) though the principle embedied in it did (7). The qualifying words "passed in an appeal under this Chapter" have been now omitted. But it has been held that this section only applies to a case where a party is entitled to a benefit by way of restitution or etherwise under a decree passed in an appeal (8). The decree to be executed is the final decree whether that decree reverses, modifies, or affirms the decree of the lower Court (9).

"Varied or reversed."—As to the legal effect of such variance or reversal, see first paragraph

Money recovered under a decree or judgment cannot be recovered back whilst the decree or judgment under which it was recovered remains in force, but this rule of law rests upon this ground, that the original decree or judgment must be taken to be subsisting and valid until it has been reversed or superseded by some ulterior proceeding. If it has been so reversed or superseded the money recovered under it ought certainly to be refunded. The true question in such cases is, whether the decree or judgment under which the money was originally recovered has been reversed or suspended (10). The supersession to which their Lordships of the Privy Council were referring in this case must be a superseding by a decree of a Court which had competent juris diction to reverse the decree under which the money had been paid if it had been the decree or order may be executed against him, to the extent to which he has rendered himself per onally hable, in the manner herein provided for the execution of decrees and such per on shall for the purposes of appeal, be deemed a party within the meaning of section 4.

Provided that such notice in writing as the Court in each case thinks sufficient has been given to the surery

Execution against surety—This section core ponds with sect 204 of Act VIII of 1809, save that the portions in it thes were added by the present Code and the last clause added by sect 203 of 1ct A of 1877. By the latter 1ct the section was limited to sureties who had become liable help effect the passing of a decree in an original suit. That himitation has been removed by the present Code.

The section applies to sureties in respect of applications for arrest and attachment before judgment under sec. 4*9 [O XXXVIII r 6] (I) It does not prevent a surety being suced on his bond but gives an additional remedy against him (2) A surety objecting to his liability being enforced under this section on the ground that he hecame liable after the decree should object under sect 278 [O XXI r 30] and not under sect 311 [O XXI r 30] (3) Under the Code of 1877 and 1882, by which the operation of this section only affected arretic who had become hable before the passing of a decree in an original art it was held that this provision did not apply to persons becoming arctics after decree (4) such as where after decree its terms were varied and provision and he for its powering that the such and for the payment of a portion of which a arctic terms that had sect 211 of Act VIII of 1839 (3) but the traditional for the performance of an sureties for the costs of appeal, (6) a. also sureties for the performance of an second appeal was filed (1) The Calcutta II C originally held that sureties for costs of appeal came within the section (2) but subsequently that execution could not issue under this provision against surcties for costs of appeal, (3) or against surcties after decree under sect 545 [O XLI r 5], (1) or against surcties under sect 546 [O XLI r 6], (5) but it could where an expanse surcties under sect 546 [O XLI r 6], (5) but it could where an expanse decree was set used on condition the defendant found a surety for any amount subsequently decreed and another decree was passed after giving of security (6) and the huntation meant "before the decrea in the original suit" which had not been made, but which would be made if the hitigation proceeded and for the performance of which the surety hecama bable (6). The removal of these words of limitation and the inclusion of paragraph (b) now extend the operation of this clause to proceedings after decree. See also notes to last exection, 'Security for restitution'.

"For the performance of any decree"—A surety pending partition by a hond undertaking to produce certain honds in case the defendant fulled to do so or to pay the amount mentioned therein is not hable for the performance of the decree, and his hability cannot be enforced in execution (7)

"Mny be executed "—The mode of enfereing payment is it has been held, by summary process in execution and not by separate suit (8). Likewise in cases of security for costs pending appeal (9). The decree against the judgment debtor does not impose a joint hability on the judgment-debtor and surety so as to enable the decree holder to take advantage of applications for execution ogainst the judgment debtor alone to save limitation (10). Under this section the Court cannot declare a forfeiture in favour of the Government for the security money should he paid to the decree helder (11)

"Extent to which he has rendered himself personnlly liable—A surety for the performance of a decree of the Court of first instance cannot have his hability increased by the decree of the Appellate Court though it may be reduced theigh. His bability is not affected by a stay of execution heing granted (12) If he made himself bable for the repayment of the principal sum awarded in a land acquisition ease he cannot be made hable for interest and costs (13)

Enlargement of time -In examining the provisions of the Bill, the attention of the Select Committee was directed to a number of clauses in which power was given to the Court to fix a period or to give or allow time for the performance of any act by a party On the strength of the facts underlying reported decisions, the clauses were expanded to make it clear, in some cases that the period or time may be extended, and in others that this power of extension may be exercised even though the original period of time has expired The Committee were of opinion that uniformity in this matter was of importance, because it might not impossibly be argued that the express conferment of these powers in certain eases negatives them by necessary implication in others This difficulty has been sought to be removed by the general enactment contained in the present section The principle embodied in this section was acted upon under the last Code in several cases, as under sect 549 of that Code (1) (now O XLI r 10) and under sect 54 where leave was obtained to amend plaint within a certain time (2) This section is the legislative recognition of the rule laid down in those cases (3) It cannot be taken to give a Court power to interfere with or modify its decree after an appeal has been filed against it (4) This section applies to cases in which the time fixed by the Code for doing some act is extended, but not to the extension of the time fixed by a mortgage decree for the payment of a prior mortgage (5) Under it the Court can extend the time for making an award, although the time has already expired (6) It has been recently held that this section does not entitle the Court to extend the time for payment of purchase money in pre emption cases and that an order under it is not a decree under sect 2 nor appealable under sect 104 (7) But in another recent case in the Allahabad High Court where an application to set aside a decree had been granted on the condition of payment of a sum of money as damages by a certain date, and this condition had not been fulfilled, and tho Court had then held that it had no jurisdiction to extend the time for such payment and had therefore proceeded to disallow the application to set asido the decree, it was held on appeal that an appeal lay from this order, and that the lower Court had such jurisdiction (8)

149. Where the whole or any part of any fee prescribed for Power to make up any document by the law for the time being in deficiency of court fees force relating to court fees has not been paid, the Court may, in its discretion, at any stage, allow the person, by whom such fee is payable, to pay the whole or part, as the case may be, of such count-fee; and upon such payment the document, in respect of which such fee is payable, shall have the same force and effect as if such fee had been paid in the first instance

Court fee -Sect 5824 of the former Code which this section replaces, was added by Act VI of 1892, settling a matter in respect of which the case law was in conflict (9) It was applied in the last mentioned case which was held to come either under sect 5 of the Limitation Act or this section (10)

Repeal—The ordinary rule of construction of Statutes gives them a future operation only, unless the legislative intent appears clear from their terms that they are to have a ictiospective operation. This presumption against ictio spective operation does not, however, exist in the case of enactments relating to procedure, including pleadings, practice, and evidence. In fact, the general principle is that alterations in procedure are always retrospective in effect and apply to pending proceedings unless there be a declared intention to the contrary or good reason against it. When the effect of an enactment is to take away a right, then it does not prima facie apply to existing rights, but when it deals with procedure only, prima facie, it applies to all actions pending as well as future (2). There is, however, a distinction between "relief" and the mode or procedure for obtaining such relief. The "rehef" remains unaffected by a change of procedure (3). The intention to take away a vested right (including a right of suit) is not to be imputed to the Legislature unless it is expressed in unequivocal terms (4).

⁽¹⁾ It was pointed out in District Munsif of Truvallur (in re) (F B), 37 M. 17 (1914), that this is an enabling (and not a repealing)

 the same act or transaction or series of acts or transactions is alleged to exist, whether jointly, severally or in the alternative, where if separate suits were brought against such persons any common question of law or fact would arise.

Scope of the English and Indian rules —Sects 26-32 of the last Code were first incorporated in Act X of 1877 from the various rules of Order XVI, framed under the Supreme Court of Judicature Act, 1873 Sect 26 was substantially the same with Rule 1 of the Order, as it stood at the time of the onactment of the Code, with the exception that that rule did not contain the words "in respect of the same cause of action". The rule was construed very broadly in the eather cases, and held to justify a joinder of plaintiffs having distinct causes of action,(1) and seeking wholly distinct rehefs, and not to import any limitation on the power of joinder (2). It was gradually narrowed in its application, and in Hannay v Smurthwaite,(3). Lord Bowen observed that it was not "the intention of this rule to allow writs to be issued under which any number of plaintiffs might join any number of causes of action or that a writ should be like an omnibus travelling on a certain route into which any number of persons may get as passengers for the journey 'It was thus first restructed to cases in which rehef was claimed in respect of the same subject matter, "as Order XVI dealing with parties, assumes an ascertained subject matter," (4) a principle recognized here in Haramoni Dassi v Har Churn Chowdhry (5). In accordance with this view, it was held in a number of cases that where the causes of action were separate and distinct they could not be joined in one action (6)

The English rule (7) was then altered in October, 1896, the alteration restricting it to eases in which the right to relief, alleged to exist, was "in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions," and where, if the persons joined brought separate actions, "any common question of law or fact would arise". Power also was expressly given in it to the Courts to "order soparate trials, or make such other order as may be expedient," if upon the upplication of any defendant it shall appear that such joined may embairs of delay the trial of the action."

The present English rule was therefore in widely different terms from sect 26 of the last Code A limited liberty of joining plaintiffs with same terms as the old English rule (7) Is in the following terms - Ill persons may be joined in one action as plain tills in whom any right to relief in respect of, or arising out of, the same transaction or series of transactions, is alleged to exist whether jointly, soverally, or in the alterna tive, where if such persons brought separate actions any common question of law or fact would arise, provided that if upon the appli cation of any defendant it shall appear that such join ler may delay or embarrass the trial of the action, the Court or a Judge may order separate trials or make such other order as may be expedient, and judgment may be given for such one or more of the plaintiffs as may be found to be entitled to reliel, for such relief as ho or they may be entitle I to, with out any amendment But the defendant though unsuccessful, shall be entitled to his costs occasioned by so joining any person who shall not be found entitle I to relief unless the Court or a Julise in dispous of the costs shall otherwise direct.

different plaintiffs to join in one action any number of separate and different causes of action, but it was intended merely to effect a modification of the old rule by which a limited linety of joining plaintiffs with separate causes of action should be conferred. The conditions are, firstly, that the right to reher alleged to east in each plaintiff should be in respect of, or arise out of, the same transaction, and secondly, that there should be a common question of fact or law (1). Where, however, there were in effect the plaintiffs and two causes of action not arising out of the same transaction, the case was held not to be within the present rule (2).

From the foregoing it will appear that the English rule was wider than that laid down in sect 26 of the Code of 1882, which might generally be said to have represented the views commenly entertained by the English Courts in the middle period between the first promulgation of the rule and its amendment in 1896. While it is sufficient under the English rule that the right to relief should arise out of the "anie transaction, the Court hour, given a control over the exercise of such right, the right of joinder given by that section was only in respect of the same cause of action a right which was still further limited by certain decisions owing to the interpretation placed upon the terms "cause of action" as to which, see post The use of the term "cause of action" in the last Code gave rise to difficulty (tide post) , the phrase therefore has been omitted and r 1 has been made to correspond with the present English rule as regards plaintiffs. It is in substantially the sime terms as O AVI r I down to the words 'would arise" The portion in the English rule from 'provided that' to "expedient" has been substantially embodied in r 2 and in O II r & post, and the pertion as to judgment being given is embodied in O I r 1 The second paragraph of sect 26 of the last Code has not been re enacted, as to which see notes to O I r 1 Rulo 3 dealing with defendants corresponding with sect 28 of the last Code has been modified to bring it in conformity with r 1 The result is an extension of the right of joinder in conformity with the English law, the decisions under which will be applicable to this rule. The Select Committee said, "It is heped that the multiplicity of suits will be further curtailed by the new provisions we have inserted to remeve limitations which no regard is needless on the comprehensiveness of a suit, and by the wider powers of amendment vested in the Courts An adequate check (see 1 2) is provided by the power of a Court to interfere where embirras ment is likely to result

"Persons"—This and the following rules deal only with the joinder of parties, and have no reference to the joinder of cauces of action Sect 31 of the last Code, which provided that nothing in the section should be deemed

Lord Bowen observed that it was not "the intention of this rule to allow writs to be issued under which any number of plaintiffs might join any number of causes of action, or that a writ should be like an omnibus travelling on a certain route into which any number of persons may get as passengers for the journey" It was thus first restricted to eases in which rehef was claimed in respect of the same subject-matter, "as Order XVI dealing with parties, assumes an ascertained subject matter," (1) a principle recognized here in Haramoni Dassi v Han Chuin Chowdhry (5). In accordance with this view, it was held in a number of cases that where the causes of action were separate and distinct they could not be joined in one action (6).

The English rule (7) was then altered in October, 1896, the alteration contributing it to cases in which the right to rehef, alleged to exist, was "in respect of or arising out of the same transaction or series of transactions," and where, if the persons joined brought separate actions, "any common question of law or fact would arise". Power also was expressly given in it to the Courts to "order separate trials, or make such other order as may be expedient," "if upon the application of any defendant it shall appear that such joinder may embairs.

The present English rule was therefore in widely different terms from sect 26 of the last Code A limited liberty of joining plaintiffs with soparate causes of action is given The nature of the limitation is plain upon the face of the rule. It was not thereby intended to allow any number of different plaintifs to join in one action any number of separate and different causes of action, but it was intended merely to effect a modification of the old rule by which a hinted liberty of joining plaintifs with separate causes of action should be conformed. The conditions are, firstly, that the right to relief alleged to exist in each plaintiff should be in respect of, or arise out of, the same transaction, and secondly, that there should be a common question of fact or law (1). Where, however, there were in effect two plaintiffs and two causes of action not arising out of the same transaction, the case was held not to be within the present rule (2).

From the foregoing it will appear that the English rule was wider than that laid down in sect 26 of the Code of 1882, which might generally be said to have represented the views commonly entertained by the English Courts m the middle period between the first promulgation of the rule and its amendment in 1896. While it is sufficient under the English rule that the right to relief should arise out of the came transaction, the Court being given a control over the exercise of such right, the right of joinder given by that section was only in respect of the same cause of action, a right which was still further limited by certain decisions owing to the interpretation placed npon the terms "cause of action,' as to which see post The use of the term "cause of action" in the last Code gave rise to difficulty (cute post), the phrase therefore has been counted and 1 1 has been made to correspond with the present English rule as regards plaintiffs. It is in substantially the same terms as O XVI r 1 down to the words "would arise" The portion in the English rule from 'provided that' to "expedient" has been substantially embodied in 1 2 and in O II r 6 post, and the portion as to judgment hemg given is embodied in O I r 1 The second paragraph of sect 26 of the last Code has not been re enacted, as to which see notes to O I r 1 Rule 3 dealing with defendants corresponding with seet 28 of the last Code has been modified to bring it in conformity with r 1 The result is no extension of the right of joinder in conformity with the Euglish law, the decisions under which will be applicable to this rule. The Select Committee said, "It is hoped that the multiplicity of suits will be further curtailed by the new provisions we have inserted to remove limitations which wo regard as needless on the compreheusiveness of a suit and hy the wider powers of amendment vested in the Courts' An adequate chick (see 1 2) is provided by the power of a Court to interfere where embirrasement is likely to result to enable pluntifis to join in respect of distinct causes of action, has been omitted, all reference to cause of action being omitted from this section, and O II deals with the joinder of causes of action

Generally, as to parties, whether plaintiffs or defendants, every person cun sue and he hable to he sued, and may thus he a party. The Code, which presupposes this rule, does not contain any provisions as to who may be parties. The portions of the Code which contain special provisions enacted on grounds of general interest, public convenience or policy, and, in the case of the incompetent, for their protection, refer generally only to the mode of suing or being sued in such cases. Every person who has a primary right or interest which has been violated in such a manner as to give him a secondary right to relief, may bring a suit as plaintiff against any person as defendant against whom an older for enforcement of that right is asked (1)

Subject to a few exceptions, the Common Law Courts were rigidly tied down to disposing of claims arising between exactly the same parties upon each side and in the same rights They could give a judgment for A sgainst C or against C, D, and E but they could not give relief of one sort against C and of another sort against D and E Nor could they give relief of one kind to A and of another kind to B, or of one kind to A and B jointly and another to A separately All the plaintiffs, if more than one, had to be jointly entitled and all the defendants jointly hable, with respect to every single matter upon which the Court was asked to adjudicate In Chancery, on the other hand, the course was to deal with the controversy or transaction forming the subject matter of the action as a whole, and endcavour to do complete justice to it and for that object the Court insisted on all the parties interested in the subject matter being brought before it (2) The Chancery Ruls has now been adopted as a general one hy both English and Indian Courts See r 10, olause (2) post The same person cannot however, he both plaintiff and defendant in a suit unless he appears upon the record in different capacities (3)

In order to enable a person to sue, the right must he a real and existing one (4) The legal interest must be existing at the date of the institution of the suit, (5) which must be brought by the person who at the date of the suit represents, so far as its subject matter is concerned the person with whom the original transaction took place (6) While the interest may be future it must be a present and existing one at the time of the suit Merely "an expectation of the possibility of a future event which, if it occurs, may give birth to an interest," is not such an interest as will give a right of suit (1) The right must have come into exi tence before the date of the suit, and therefore a real owner's disclaimer, made in his deposition in a suit, has been held not sufficient to give a plaintiff a right to maintain a suit (2) The plaintiff must have a subsisting cause of action at the time of the institution of the suit, and he cannot take advantage of events that have happened sub equently (3) I suit by a person in respect of an act by which he may never be injuriously affected at all is premature (f) Leaving such general considerations, it may be stated that the question as to whether there is a right to relief in any case, and as to the person in whom that right is vested, and against whom it may be claimed and the nature of the relief, are questions of substantive law, and not part of the law of procedure, which may restrict or even extinguish such a right, but cannot create or extend it (5) This matter therefore does not come within the scope of this Commentary, and will not be dealt with by it (6) The rules relating to parties laid down by the Code refer not so much to the persons who may be parties as to their joinder Is to defendants, tide post

"May be joined"—This section, under the Code of 1882, was beld to be on enabling one, ellowing a number of plantiffs with the same right to relief to join in one suit instead of brioging separate suits. It did not say that ell persons must be joined as plantiffs when they bid the same cause of action against the defendant (7). The present section is equally enabling. There is a distinction between a joint right and a right enjoyed in common with others. In the first case it may be necessary for ell persons jointly interested to be joined as parties, and if they are not joined the suit may be bad for misjoinder (8). Where a person sues under a power of attorney, the principal's name should oppear as plantiff (9). It was keld that Act X of 1859 allowed suits to be instituted by zemindars in their own names by their authorized agents, but the ogent has no right to institute the suit in his own name. The zemindar's name should oppear on the record as the plantiff (10). It has been held the managing members of a Mittalshare joint family aen sue authout making the other members to sue, the right has been based partly on the first that he is the transferce named in the registered instrument constituting the transfer, and on the principle that a contract can be enforced by the parties who have entered into it north on the ground that the defendant is estouned from raising the question, and partly on the view that the benamidar must be presumed to be suing on behalf of the beneficial owner, or to mut the same idea into other words, that the suit is really brought by the beneficial owner through, and in the name of the henoundar. On the other hand, those rulings which are adverse (1) to the right of the benumidar to sue are mainly based on the ground that a suit cannot be maintained by any person who fails to prove if his title is challenged, that he has a teal interest of his own in the subjectmatter of the suit (2) In some cases it seems to have been held that there is a distinction between suits on bonds and the like and suits for unmoveable property in that in the former case a benamidar may, and in the latter may not, suc (3) But even in this the cases are not uniform (1) As to benamidar defendants, see not, and as to adding a benamidar as a party, r 10, post.
